CCC Unit Assists Police and Fireman

Pair, o nan Outing With Parents, Disappeared in Afternoon.

Rescue parties made up of 100 CCC boys and scores of firemen, police and private citizens last night frantically combed a large section of Prince Georges County, including a three-mile wide swamp, seeking John and Margaret Miller, 8-year-old twins, of 11 Milmarson place northwest, who disappeared at 2:30 p. m. while playing along the edge of the morass.

The children were with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Miller, and two older brothers, George, jr., and Samuel. The family had gone on a outing and when the automobile stopped on Sunnyside road across the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks the children alighted and began to play.

After a time, the two other boys returned and reentered the automobile. They said they had not seen the twins for some time. The parents and the two boys then began a search.

Call for Help.

With dusk nearing and no trace of the children, the parents rushed to the home of Prof. Carl Scheafer, of Georgetown School of Music, and called for help.

The CCC boys encamped at Beltsville turned out and were quickly joined by firemen from Branchville, Beltsville and College Park. Radio appeals for information were sent out and with each broadcast more men and boys joined the hunt.

When darkness fell, the rescuers redoubled their efforts but the search was confused to a large extent by receipts of many conflicting reports that the twins had been sighted.

Reports Seeing Twins.

Arthur Lizer, who lives near the swamp, reported he and a friend, Alfred Fleshman, of Berwyn, saw the children near the marsh, but thought nothing of it until Mr. and Mrs. Miller came to his home and reported the children had been lost.

Then Lizer, Fleshman and the former's son, James Lizer, and Paul Jones, of Beltsville, entered the swamps. When night fell they reported they had trailed the children a mile and a half into the interior of the swamp.

Other reports were that the children had been seen near Muirkirk and Laurel.

CCC Youths Recalled.

Edward Oroan, who lives with his parents on the University of Maryland experimental farm at Beltsville reported he saw two children walking along the B. & O. tracks near the farm.

Annther report placed the children walking on Baltimore boulevard near Beltsville.

The search was considerably slowed up at 10:30 p. m., 8 hours after the twins were first missed, when the CCC youths were called off and sent back to camp.

The swamp where the children were thought to be is reputed to have quicksands and considerable bodies of deep standing water.

Outlaw Escapes Police Ambush

Raymond Hamilton Speeds Away in Rain of Lead; Believed Hurt.

By the Associated Press.

McKinney, Tex., Feb. 24.—Raymond Hamilton, notorious Texas death house fugitive, escaped a carefully laid police trap 3 miles from McKinney early tonight, but officers who laid the ambush believed they wounded him.

Hamilton's recent activities include escape from a police trap in Dallas which ultimately resulted in capture of his brother, Floyd. Later Hamilton raided a Texas National Guard Armory and there seized sub-macrine guns and ammunition.

Two State highway patrolmen, six officers from McKinney and Dallas County officers were in the party that showered Hamilton's car with bullets as he drove slowly along an abandoned highway shortly after dusk tonight. The gunman stopped momentarily, then sped away.

The officers, afoot, having left their machines hidden in the brush, were thus handicapped in pursuit of the outlaw. He fled in a northwesterly direction and was believed headed toward Gainesville.

Through an informant, the band of officers had been tipped Hamilton would be driving along the road late today. They were given the license number of the car.

Equipoise to Retire, West Coast Hears

Retirement of Equipoise, the great C. V. Whitney thoroughbred, was understood yesterday to have been decided on.

The sensational horse, second only to Sun Beau in total earnings and victor in 30 races out of 51 starts, finished seventh behind Azucar in the $100,000 Santa Anita handicap on the West Coast Saturday.

Experts at the track said they had observed indications that Equipoise may have suffered from a bowed tendon in his right front leg. Sonny Workman, the jockey, had nothing to say except that it wasn't the "real" Equipoise under him in the race.

Equipoise's retirement would follow many strenuous campaigns in which the strong heart of the thoroughbred always was found true.

Tinted Toenails Flash in Psalm Interpretation Before Altar.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 24.—While the minister looked on from front pew, Ruth St. Denis danced a "rhythmic interpretation of the Psalms" before the altar of a Park Avenue church today.

A symphony in white, black and red, the dancer went through motions which she said symbolized "the gradual ascent of man's soul from the moment he acknowledges his need of spiritual light to the final radiation."

A "first reader" and a "second reader," standing in the pulpit and one at the other side of the church, read passages from the Psalms, and from Miss St. Denis' own writings amplifying them. After a few verses the dancer interpreted them to "musical improvisations" on the piano by another member of her company.

The Park Avenue Presbyterian Church was crowded. The Rev. Edmund M. Wylie said in introducing Miss St. Denis that he had never realized "the greatness of her interpretation of spiritual themes until I saw her myself."

Miss St. Denis, barefooted and clad in a long, simple back robe with flowing sleeves, went through motions of tragedy and despair before a gilt throne set on top of a modernistic arrangement of gold blocks in front of the altar.

As the mood of her dance became more joyful she mounted the steps and sat in the throne. Finally she removed the black robe to show a similar long, simple flowing white garment, and danced her idea of the "final radiation."

With dancing movements, she led the church members through the hymn, "Come Thou Almighty King." After the minister had pronounced a benediction, she slipped quietly away behind the gold blocks.

White of hair and pale of face, the only color she displayed was the carmine of her lips, fingernails and toenails.

"The church is where dancing began, where it belongs and where it will end," she said afterward.

"Every nation danced in its early forms of religious worship. Circumstances pushed dancing aside, but forward-looking ministers are now beginning to bring it back."

Miss St. Denis said she had always had one "spiritual dance" on every program, but now was devoting her entire time to "preaching and dancing."

Spain Fears Outbreaks, Prolongs Martial Law

Madrid, Feb. 24 (AP).—High army officials claimed today they were ready to handle any organized campaign of disorders, said to be planned by leftists for tomorrow or Tuesday to intimidate authorities who, tomorrow, will consider death penalties given several radicals for participation in the October revolt.

A decree prolonging martial law for 30 days in several provinces was published today and the state of alarm was continued in force throughout the rest of Spain.

Liberty Body Fears a U. S. Credit Boom

By Felix Bruner.

A warning that the menace of credit inflation is greater than that of currency inflation was sounded by the American Liberty League yesterday.

With inflationists particularly active since the Supreme Court gold case decisions, the league took the opportunity to point out the dangers of too rapid expansion and to commend President Roosevelt for his refusal to be stampeded by those who would expand the currency.

The league in its analysis pointed to three "avenues through which inflation of a devastating character" may come. They are:

"1. Treasury deficits which, unless ended speedily, will lead inevitably to unsound financing methods.

"2. Printing press currency proposed to be issued to finance specific projects or general expenditures.

Warns of Political Control.

"3. Credit expansion policies under recent and proposed monetary and banking laws permitting a concentration of political control and offering a foundation for disastrous inflation."

The league pointed out that the Administration is pursuing a policy of credit expansion with a view to stimulation of industry. It declared that so long as new credit anticipates a healthy increase in business, the results are beneficial.

"If there is a wave of speculative activity which leads to an undue use of credit, inflation develops," the statement continued.

"As an engine of inflation, credit is much more powerful under our banking system than currency.

Points to Credit Possibilities.

"At no time in our history have the potentialities in the way of credit expansion and, therefore, of inflation, been so great. The reason may be found in the monetary legislation enacted in the past two years. The pending banking act of 1935 broadens the powers of administrative authorities to promote an expansion of credit and by the same token increases the danger of inflation."

On the basis of existing law, the league statement declared, the total expansion possibilities are far in access of $100,000,000,000.

"The Administration deserves commendation," the statement continued, "for its refusal thus far to utilize the power given in the Thomas inflation amendment in May, 1933. Under that act there is permissive authority to the executive branch of the Government to resort to the same type of financing that France, Germany and Russia did when they were unable to meet their obligations by ordinary borrowing."

Taxpayers "Real Debtors."

The league questioned the often repeated assertion that inflation would benefit the farmers. It pointed out that many farmers are creditors as well as debtors and that farm mortgages comprise only a small proportion of the country's internal debts. Quoting a publication, "The Internal Debts of the United States," by Evans Clark, the league said that the total of farm mortgages is $8,500,000,000, representing only 6.7 per cent of the total debt.

Other debtors and the percentage of their indebtedness in referenece to the whole debt of the country, are given, as follows: Owners of city real estate, 21.7 per cent; financial corporations, including life insurance companies, investment trusts and loan agencies, 17.3 per cent; States, counties, cities and municipalities, 14.7 per cent; railroads, 11.3 per cent; the Federal Government, 11.2 per cent; public utility corporations, 8.9 per cent; industrial corporations, 8.2 per cent. The grand total of this indebtedness was given as $126,800,000,000.

This indebtedness would necessarily have to be paid in debased money in event of increased inflation. The league pointed out that the real debtors are taxpayers, who

Hogan, D. C. Lawyer, Acquires Original of 'Village Blacksmith'

By a Staff Correspondent.

"The village smithy stands——"

The original manuscript of this poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the most widely paraphrased poem in American literature, has just been acquired by a Washingtonian—Frank J. Hogan, the lawyer.

Mr. Hogan will add the Longfellow poem to his Washington collection of the first editions, which includes Cervantes' "Don Quixote," Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe," Swift's "Gulliver's Travels," Oliver Goldsmith's "The Vicar of Wakefield" and many other classics.

Longfellow sold his poem for $15. How much Mr. Hogan paid for it is not known. The Washington attorney showed the faded manuscript to a representative of The Post, but he declined to say what he paid for it.

Hogan is representing former Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, who is charged with failing to pay more than $3,000,000 in income taxes in 1931.

"The Village Blacksmith" was written in Longfellow in 1841. Its publication brought the poet his first widespread recognition. Twenty years later, when his name had become a household word in America, he frequently received offers of thousands of dollars for anything he chose to write.

Ride in Sleigh Provides Fun For President

By Leon Dure, Jr.
A Staff Correspondent.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Feb. 24.—President Roosevelt, who has traveled more than 30,000 miles by almost every conceivable means of transportation in the last two years, today took his first sleigh ride since he entered the White House.

He was inspired to do this by warm, almost summery weather that softened, but did not quite melt the foot of snow blanketing the Hudson Valley. Seeking to make the most of his short vacation at home, he ordered a broad-backed road mare from his mother's stable and had her hitched to the old family cutter.

Mr. Roosevelt reserved for himself the driver's seat and tucked in his daughter, Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Boettiger, beside him. The husky John Boettiger, former Chicago newspaperman who recently married the President's daughter, was waved into a third seat behind. The ancient family cutter is a three-seater affair, with room for one in a sort of "rumble" compartment.

There were no jingle bells, nor did the President make any concession to sleigh-riding in the way of dress. He wore a brown felt hat and an overcoat and used a heavy lap robe. Nor did he carry a whip to quicken the pace of the family's old mare, which is nicknamed "The Rocking Chair" by the children who ride it.

But the outing was a merry one just the same. Starting from the Mansion House, the President drove 2 miles through the woods, along a narrow road, to the Dutch cottage at one end of his mother's estate. This is known as Val-Kill and it is here that Mrs. Roosevelt's small furniture factory is situated.

Secret service men, who must accompany the President wherever he goes, had a hard time keeping their car from getting stuck in the soft snow behind. Their only fear concerned the horse and a possible runaway, but one glance at the slow-footed animal and any worries from that quarter evaporated.

Mr. Roosevelt arrived here at 8 a. m. after an overnight train ride from Cambridge, Mass., where last night he helped initiate his third son Franklin D. jr., into the ex-

Mellon Wants Connoisseurs To Aid Gallery

By Edward T. Folliard.
A Staff Correspondent.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 24.—From a Hollywood standpoint, Andrew W. Mellon is a very unorthdox millionaire. His home here is an unpretentious one and so is his office in the Mellon National Bank. He does not own a yacht, nor a private railroad car or a racing stable. And aside from a pair of gold cuff links, he does not wear any jewelry.

This innate modesty of the erstwhile Secretary of the Treasury and Ambassador to the Court of St. James' will be reflected in the great national gallery of art which he plans to establish in Washington.

He has specified that the proposed gallery not be considered a memorial to him, even though he is contributing masterpieces worth $25,000,000 and a handsome building in which to house them.

Just a Beginning.

To call it the Mellon Gallery, he believes, would be to defeat his plan for a truly great shrine of art in Washington. Vast as is his own collection, he hopes that it will be just the beginning, the initial unit. I nhis mind, he sees the gallery growing and growing until it ranks with the national gallery in London and the Louvre in Paris.

And it is to encourage such growth that he is withholding his name from the Gallery. He is hoping that other wealthy individuals will pool their art collections in Washington, and he realizes that, human being what it is, they would not be likely to do so if they were asked to fatten a collection bearing the name of Mellon.

In the United States are private collections which if concentrated in Washington would make the proposed National Gallery all that Mr. Mellon wants it to be.

Provides Incentive.

Thus far, however, there has been no incentive for the owners of these collections to send them to Washington.

True, there are several fine art museums in Washington, as for example, the Corcoran Gallery of Art, the Freer Gallery and a gal-

Kaisers Never to Reign Again, Hitler Shouts as Nazis Cheer

By the Associated Press.

Munich, Germany, Feb. 24.—The heavy hand and shouting voice of Adolf Hitler sought to banish forever today all thought of the return of a monarch to the German Reich.

"To fools who still dream of a restored regime," Hitler shouted, "I say that what once was can never be again. You will never return to power."

The huge Munich town hall echoed and reechoed with cheers from an assembly of seasoned old Nazi campaigners and eager young aspirants to Nazi honors gathered to celebrate the fifteenth anniversary of the day Hitler proclaimed the Nazi gospel in a Munich beer cellar.

"We are all for peace," said Hitler during his speech, touching only briefly on foreign relations, "but not at the price of our honor. We are ready for any kind of cooperation, but if the world does not understand we are ready at all times to stand on our own feet."

Mainly his address was a series of recollections of the struggles of national socialism and a justification of Nazi "hardfistedness" as necessary in view of what he called the corruption of the regime that preceded.

"Unshakable faith in the German people," Hitler proclaimed, "was my sole inspiration and sustenance at a time when the country languished in deepest humiliation, when materialism triumphed, and when mammon ruled.

"When five Germans were together there were five parties. But I knew another, a better Germany, invisible then to most other people."

"We were dishonored for 13 years through false leadership," said the Reichfuehrer, returning once more to the theme of monarchial

Press Predicts Removal of Simon; Cabinet Is Object of Attack.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 24.—One hundred thousand persons participated in country-wide demonstrations against dole restrictions today and heard proposals for a one-day protest strike as rumors continued of an impending shake-up in the British cabinet.

At the largest meeting, at Aberkenfig, Glamorganshire, 60,000 approved a resolution urging that workers consider a day-long strike in an effort to force the government to withdraw all existing dole regulations and create new scales of payment.

More than 30 assemblages were held in South Wales, including one at Tonypandy, where 20,000 were gathered. In London James Maxton, Laborite member of Parliament, addressed crowds in Hyde Park.

The protests were directed against the family means test, the new regulation, which cuts payments to unemployed heads of families if their dependents are earning anything and vice versa.

Some Cuts Restored.

The government recently restored general cuts in unemployed assistance as the result of vehement protests, but the unemployed contended this was only a start and demanded elimination of all existing dole regulations.

Regarding the possible cabinet shake-up the Sunday Pictorial offered a new forecast, declaring it would be "no surprise," if Sir John Simon, the foreign secretary; Sir John Gilmour, home secretary; Walter Runciman, president of the board of trade, and Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, colonial secretary, were kicked upstairs into the House of Lords to make room for new blood.

The publications of Lord Rothemere, who owns the Pictorial, are satisfied that the present Parliament will live out its constitutional life ending in September, 1936.

Financial Scandal.

The pepper-pool financial scandal of the latest inauguration for an attack on the government. Former Premier David Lloyd George and others in political speeches yesterday laid the blame for the financial crash squarely in front of the cabinet.

Despite the government's overwhelming majority in Parliament, its friends admit they are no longer certain whether the present cabinet still commands a real majority in the nation.

The Labor Party has increased its strength in bye-elections and many neutral observers consider the Laborites now have at least an even chance of victory in a general election. Ever since Lloyd George launched his "new deal" campaign, Liberals identified with the national coalition have urged his inclusion in the cabinet.

Conservative Support.

Now even a substantial number of Conservatives, whose party is the backbone of the government, are joining in the cry, but Lloyd George himself put a damper on the matter by declaring he doesn't want a cabinet job.

The Conservatives are not particularly impressed with his "new deal," which they consider much the same as the recovery program already being pursued, but feel the 72-year-old Welshman, as vigorous on the platform as he ever was during the war, will provide much-needed driving power.

On the other hand, many Conservatives are openly demanding that Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald be shelved. It is believed that MacDonald, since he has no actual party support other than the National Laborites, who are a negligible factor today, could offer no serious opposition to Lloyd George.

Teachers Call Strike.

Scranton, Pa., Feb. 24 (AP).—Thirty members of the Teachers' Association of Mayfield borough plan to go on strike tomorrow because of the failure of the school board to pay them six months' back salaries. It will be the third strike of the teachers in the last 13 months.

Bomb Blasts Car of Gasoline, Destroys Train in Mine War

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 24.—A dynamite bomb blasted a tank car loaded with gasoline from the tracks of the Chicago & Illinois Midland Railroad today and turned it into a volcano of flame that spurted over 11 other cars of the loaded freight train, destroying them.

Officials took it as a grim answer to the Federal and State round-up of suspected bombers of coal trains and the $200,000 civil suit started last week, accusing members of the Progressive Miners Union of the reign of violence.

There was one coal car on the mixed freight of 33 cars that was wrecked by the dynamite at Andrew Station, eight miles north of Springfield. A Peabody Coal Co. mine employing United Mine Workers is situated at Andrew.

The dynamite explosion, set in the middle of the track, could not have been better timed for destructive purposes. It burst under the one gasoline car of the train, and the terrific heat of the spreading flames prevented any attempt to save the box cars and the one coal carrier.

The right of way was burned for a quarter-mile and traffic was blocked throughout the day. The fire was still eating through the wreckage 12 hours after the explosion.

Blizzard Sweeps East, Snow Probable Here

Lincoln, Nebr., Feb. 24 (AP).—A blizzard, accompanied by dust storms at places, today swept eastward from the Rocky Mountain regions. Driven by a 45-mile wind, the snow drifted high and temperatures dropped near zero.

Gothenburg and Hastings, Nebr., experienced their first dust blizzard as dust and snow, mixed by a fitful wind, fell in near-zero weather. In Gothenburg tons of fine dirt were hurled into the air. Daylight did not come until noon.

Transport planes were held back by the storm.

Won't Back Down on Prevailing Wage Provisions.

By Elliott Thurston.

President Roosevelt is faced with legislative chaos at the Capitol.

Not since he became President has the congressional situation been as confused.

Many reasons lie behind the present condition: Some groups are playing politics trying to embarrass the Administration. Many Democrats are making trouble in an attempt to force capitulation to their patronage demands. Controversy has become intensified over power, relief, the securities program, banking, monetary and inflation measures, the NRA and other important subjects.

New Deal Now Static.

Now that its program is practically complete, observers declare, the New Deal has become virtually static, its momentum gone, so that rival ideas for the first time begin to crystalize. So-called left wing forces, no longer hoping for anything more from the New Deal, tend to battle harder for higher works pay, bigger pensions, more inflation through increased silver buying or other devices, for the bonus and other hand-outs to the voters. No longer a swiftly-moving target, the New Deal's so-called static condition puts it in focus and range of right wing forces. It is being fired at with far greater intensity from both extremes. Meanwhile confusion reigns among its own nominal followers and designated leaders.

President Insistent.

Meanwhile, word came from Hyde Park, where President Roosevelt is taking a short vacation, that there was every indication he would not back down on the prevailing wage provisions of the $4,800,000,000 works bill. He is said to be hopeful that after allowing several weeks for public reaction to set in, the Senate will pass the measure in substantially its original form.

The fiasco over the works relief bill is symptomatic. Many Democrats prefer the dole, feel that neither our own nor British and other foreign experience with "made work" justifies the hope that 3,500,000 men can be put to work on public projects. Many Southern and Eastern Democrats, as well as Republicans, complain that the West would get the bulk of the made works and the East and South would be left to pay the bills.

Rightists Want the Dole.

More conservative forces think if the bill were pared down to around $2,000,000,000 and the dole restored it would revive confidence among business interests fearing inflation as a result of budgetary collapse. Some Republicans have seized on the opportunity to make confusion worse confounded by concerting with Huey Long and left wingers who want to make the bill a Christmas tree on which to hang every sort of legislative gew-gaw.

On top of all the pulling and hauling, politics and patronage, observers say, is the fact that the New Deal itself has never yet been able to explain, except in large generalities, for just what the vast new tide of money would be used. The promise to put administration of the bill in theoretically neutral hands only adds to dissatisfaction among the congressional forces who want to be sure their districts and constituents will get all the fat slices coming to them.

Works Bill Hangs Fire.

Senators Glass, chairman, and Byrnes, important member, of the Appropriations Committee, said last night there was no plan to call

U. S. Boat Asks Aid as Storm Whips Atlantic, Mediterranean.

By the Associated Press.

Five ships sent out distress calls yesterday as gales continued to lash the North Atlantic and the Bay of Biscay and swept into the Mediterranean.

A Greek steamer believed to be the Delphoi, drifting helplessly with damaged engines, and the British freighter Hillcroft, with a broken rudder, were reported in trouble in almost the same position, off Cape Finisterre, Spain, in the Bay of Biscay, where four ships sent out S O S calls last week.

The United States Shipping Board freighter Oakman, out of Mobile, Ala., was reported in distress, though in no immediate danger, from a lost rudder 700 miles northwest of the Azores, with the S. S. City of Newport News standing by.

An S O S from the Italian steamer Speitro in the Mediterranean was picked up by Casablanca Radio Station.

The disabled British vessel Ottinge messaged that assistance was "urgent" when the tow line to a tug taking her to port parted. The Ottinge was one of the seven ships in difficulty last week when her steering gear was lost off Lands End.

Liner Docks Late.

The Hmburg-American liner New York arrived in New York two days late due to storms which carried away one of her ventilators and broke several windows on her boat deck.

Capt. Eberhardt Friedel declared he had seen few worse storms in his experience. Tons of water at times submerged the bow of the giant liner, he said, stopping her headway.

The storms encountered by the New York appeared to have been widespread, for two ships were driven aground off the coast of Japan last week and an oyster sloop was grounded off the Delaware coast, besides the four vessels in difficulties in the Bay of Biscay.

Ice also hindered shipping near shore. The Coast Guard ice cutter AB 24 sank in Great South Bay off Long Island when ice floes shrust a great hole in her side. Her crew escaped.

Not on Register.

The Delphoi and Hillcroft off the Spanish coast reported almost the same position, the Delphoi at latitude 43.47 north longitude 9.42 west, and the Hillcroft at latitude 43.20 north longitude 9.20 west.

No ship by the name of Delphoi is listed in Lloyds Marine Register, but the Bordeaux radio station and Lloyds in London reported messages from a ship by that name. Radiomarine Corporation received

Plot to Kidnap Grace Receives U. S. Attention

Four Held; Ringleader in Abduction Scheme Is Still at Large.

By the Associated Press.

Bethlehem, Pa., Feb. 24.—The Federal Government's entrance into investigation of a kidnap plot against Eugene G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., was reported tonight by Mayor Robert Pfeifle.

The mayor, named as one of two public officials to be abducted with the steel magnate, said several men are being sought in connection with the plot—apparently nipped by arrest of four men on robbery charges.

Agents of the United States Justice Department are working with State police and Bethlehem detectives, he said.

Details of the case were hidden behind a veil of police silence. State Policeman Marshall Wilhelm disclosed that one of the quartet of alleged robbers revealed Grace was to have been held for $250,000 ransom.

The other intended victims, he said, were named as Mayor Robert Pfeifle of Bethlehem, and Nicholas Castelucci, a Northampton County courthouse attache against whom the would-be kidnapers are reputed to have held a grudge.

Ringleaders at Large.

Wilhelm said the rangleader of the conspiracy is at large. He would not name him and also declined to say who among the four in custody disclosed the plan.

The four, held for a series of robberies, including two bank holdups, are Barlow Orlando, 29, and Angelo Bommarito, 21, both of Detroit; Frank Repyneck, 26, Bethlehem, and Louis Kutzura, of Hellertown.

Persons at the Grace home said the steel company executive was out of the city and that they knew nothing of the plot.

Hunt Is Pressed.

Superior officers at the State police barracks in Reading declined to make any enlightening comment on the investigation they acknowledged is under way. Sergt. Reece Davis, in charge of the work, said a search is being made for another man.

Bethlehem police were equally reticent and refused to say whether the four men are in their custody or at the State police barracks.

Congress Romps; $60,000,000 Seed Loan Bill; Relief in the Kingdom of the Kingfish.

By Raymond Clapper

PROBABLY it is a good thing for President Roosevelt to get away from Washington for a few days at this critical moment. Stock taking certainly is in order.

Despite an unprecedented majority in both Houses of Congress, the Administration has lost control of the situation and the versatile boys are romping about in all directions, merrily flinging monkey wrenches, feathering their own nests back home, nibbling out of the hands of pressure group lobbyists and tossing out Federal largesse with wild abandon.

First they fudged up the pay restoration for Government employes, hitching it as a rider to an appropriation bill so that the President could do nothing except approve it under protest. Then Congress shoved a $60,000,000 seed loan bill at him, although no allowance was made for it in the budget. These seed loans always have been regarded as something in the nature of petty congressional graft somewhat like the late free seed racket, which finally was driven out of existence by ridicule. When Roosevelt signed one last year he said he never hoped to see another one. But he did, and he signed it, just a few days ago.

Also in face of a fight by the Administration, the amendment by Senator Wheeler, Montana Democrat, to make 1 per cent cut in interest rates on Federal Land Bank loans was shoved through. The crowning blow of course was the adoption of the prevailing wage amendment to the works bill, an amendment offered by a Democrat supported by a coalition of 20 Democrats, almost all of the Republicans and Huey Long.

Congress has been in session almost two months and practically all of its important legislation still is incubating in committee. Only one of the dozen regular annual appropriation bills has been passed. The only other legislative output has consisted of a handful of minor bills.

* * * *

Many have complained that Congress has, during the first two years of the New Deal, abdicated its legislative function and become a rubber stamp. Congress has been urged to scrutinize proposed legislation and to take a more active hand in shaping policies. To the extent that it is doing this with social security legislation, the holding company bill, AAA amendments, the proposed banking act of 1935, and the extension of NRA the process is a healthy return to more normal deliberative processes. Mistakes and hasty judgment are more likely to be caught before they go on the statute books.

* * * *

That phase of the situation is not causing the apprehension. It is the fact that Congress is trying to out-Santa Clause the Administration that is disturbing many. When Congress has broken out of bounds it has been in the direction of greater, and more reckless spending. Even the Republicans who for two years have been shrieking in professed agony over the lavish outpouring of Federal funds now grab the bait held out by Huey Long and the extreme left wingers and vote for what their own orthodox economists describe as the dangerous prevailing wage amendment, just to put the President in a hole.

Just around the corner lie the inflationists ready to take advantage of the situation and move in.

The Republican conservatives won't vote for inflation, too, just to put the President in a hole, will they?

* * * *

So it is a good thing Mr. Roosevelt is passing a few days at Hyde Park where he can gaze out of the windows on his peaceful estate. He has plenty to think about.

* * * *

Neil Vanderbilt says the millionaires were storing canned goods in their basements and putting iron grates over their windows while they shivered with fear of an uprising earlier in the depression. Maybe so, but everybody can shudder at the thought of what might result if Federal relief funds should be cut off suddenly due to congressional paralysis.

In State after State the unemployed are almost solely dependent upon Federal relief funds. In 1933 the Federal Government supplied 60 per cent of all relief money doled out in the country. Last year more than 69 per cent of it came from Washington. The national average, however, scarcely gives a real picture.

Proud and thrifty New England has leaned less heavily on Federal relief funds than any other section. In Massachusetts local communities put up two-thirds of the relief funds, the best record of any State.

Southern States leaned almost entirely on the Federal Government. We shiver in raw February weather in Washington and read about the boom in Florida where the crowds pack Hialeah by day and Bradley's by night, but the statistics show that Washington has supplied 99.9 per cent of Florida's relief funds that sustain the misery which hovers in the shadows of the East's glamorous winter playground.

In the kingdom of the Kingfish the Federal Government put up during 21 months 98 per cent of the relief funds. Local communities supplied 2 per cent, and a footnote in small type says the State of Louisiana supplied less than one-twentieth of 1 per cent. Federal funds have carried more than 90 per cent of the load in most Southern States.

President Roosevelt frequently draws on his freshman law course for a homely illustration to clarify a complex issue. When he was discussing the Chicago water diversion controversy recently, he went back to English common law and dug up the principle which requires that a person who takes water out of a stream must put it back in fairness to others further downstream. Asked to define a public utility, he replied that he couldn't define the term now, but that the first institution known as a public utility was a ferry across the Thames.

engines, had to confine their efforts to saving a small packing plant adjacent to the point where the blazing cars rolled to a stop. Windows in the building were shattered.

No one was hurt. Damage to the cars, right of way and merchandise had not been estimated tonight.

Investigators, assuming this to be another attack by one of the factions in the long wars between the United Mine Workers of America and the Progressive Miners, found, as usual, no clews to the identity of the bombers. They were unable, this time, even to tell whether the blast was set off by an electric switch in a nearby field or by an automatic fuse ignited by the passing cars.

Two other dynamite bombs were exploded last week on railroad switch tracks near mines at Springfield and Du Quoin, roaring defiance to the State, Federal and local investigators who recently examined numerous suspects and arrested two men in efforts to end the long series of bombings in the coal fields.

The arrest of the pair—Herman Stoval, of Muddy, Ill., and Elliott Wybick, of Eldora, Ill.—acted as a spur for the terrorists who replied with today's bombing, the most serious in the long string. Earlier in the week railroad employes found 113 sticks of dynamite planted on a main-line track of the Chicago & Illinois Midland, which operates principally in Christian County, scene of many violent reprisals since the battle began.

At Danville, Ill., a $200,000 damage suit was tossed into the fray with officers and some 300 members of the Progressive Union named as defendants in an action charging them with responsibility for a number of murders, shootings, bombings and sluggings.

Alwin Karnes, of Madisonville, Ky., who filed the suit, alleged that he was attacked while employed in a Peabody mine at Harrisburg, Ill. He was represented by a United Mine Workers attorney.

William Keck, president of the Progressive Union, replied that the suit is propaganda intended to "intimidate and discourage" his organization.

Work Is Speeded For Lee Boulevard

Completion to Arlington Bridge Seen Near.

Lee Boulevard completed to the Arlington Memorial Bridge is to be a reality during this year, in the opinion of those who during the past month have been actively engaged in securing the remaining 2 miles of right of way from Lyon Park.

T. W. Ross, one of the State's right-of-way engineers, and County Engineer C. L. Kinnier have after a month's effort obtained more than 95 per cent of the needed rights of way and reports are to the effect that within the next few days all will have been obtained.

Wednesday afternoon there will be a special public hearing at the courthouse by the Arlington County appeal board to act upon a request for a change in the set-back along the boulevard from Station 107 to the bridge from 60 to 25 feet. At this meeting it is expected that an announcement will be made by the State highway department to the effect that all rights of way have been obtained.

Funds for the building of the highway will come from a portion of the State's share of the PWA. Rights of way will have to be paid for out of funds allocated from the State road budget.

Yawns, Poetry, Traffic Hint Spring, but Snow's in Offing

Spring, so-called, slipped over Washington yesterday for a brief visit, setting some folk to writing poetry and making others yawn. Thousands jammed the highways in automobiles or stretched their legs on the avenues. Children played baseball in vacant lots and marbles on muddy sidewalks. Lads and lassies gamboled in the sunshine, shedding their overcoats and inviting pneumonia, while the mercury climbed to a high of 55 in the mid-afternoon. But the weatherman only shrugged his shoulders at these manifestations of the vernal urge.

"It probably will snow tonight," he said.

The prediction, reached after due concentration over the weather charts in that discouraging office on M street, is that today will be cloudy, followed by a nearer approach to winter weather by late afternoon or evening. But the weatherman wouldn't bet on his predicted snowfall.

"I said 'probably,'" he pointed out.

Several indications of spring were observed yesterday. At a late hour, however, nobody had reported seeing the first robin. Sales of sulphur and molasses were reported to have reached a new high for the year. But more tangible signs were to be found in the main thoroughfares, where police reported a heavy increase in traffic. Such places as Hains Point and Rock Creek Park attracted thousands during the day and points of historical interest were far from neglected.

Connecticut and Massachusetts avenues were crowded with pedestrians taking themselves, and often their dogs, for a walk. Cutting back rose bushes was a popular pastime in back yards. But with all this activity and all the incidental yawning and stretching the weatherman remained skeptical. He looked in the general direction of nor'west.

"There's snow in them thar hills," he said.

Father Fails to Put Up Bond at Once.

By the Associated Press.

Pawnee, Okla., Feb. 24.—Federal Judge Franklin E. Kennamer permitted his 19-year-old son, Phil, to remain in the Pawnee County Jail today without making immediate efforts to provide $25,000 bond for release of the youth, sentenced yesterday to 25 years in prison for manslaughter.

The confident Phil Eagerly perused newspaper accounts of the sentence, imposed by District Judge Thurman Hurst after a jury had convicted him earlier in the week of killing John Gorrell, 23-year-old dental student, in Tulsa last Thanksgiving Day.

Judge Kennamer, ill and exhausted after the long ordeal of the trial, rested today at a resort near Tulsa. A. Flint Moss, chief counsel for young Kennamer, said he planned to start action tomorrow toward providing the bond.

Los Angeles, Feb. 24 (AP).—Two young women who have never used cosmetics, never been in a theater, never danced, never cut their hair, never seen a baseball or football game, never had a drink of wine——.

Incidentally, they have never had a date, they say.

rule, "but such a Germany shall never come back. The German nation is determined to defend its liberty to the last. Neither I nor anyone after me will sign anything derogatory to our honor. What we sign we will keep."

Frantic cheers rang again through the "Tonhalle" in this birthplace of National Socialism.

Before Hitler spoke, Adolf Wagner, Bavarian minister of the interior and an early associate of Hitler, reviewed the Nazi Party's phenomenal rise to power since the days when Rudolf Schussler, its first treasurer, kept scanty contributions from the membership in a cigar box.

The celebration in this birthplace of National Socialism was to commemorate the day in 1920 when Hitler in a Hofsbrau beer cellar proclaimed his 25 theses known as the Nazi gospel.

Wagner said the 25 theses still stood and would stand unalterable forever.

"Der Fuehrer and his men have pledged that this program for which 300 fighters died and 1,000 bled shall be carried out in full," said Wagner.

He traced the historic growth of National Socialism and its interruption by the unsuccessful 1923 putsch, which, he said, failed only through treachery. He pointed out that since the party reformation in February, 1925, after Hitler's release from jail, the party had never looked back, never rested while conquering the whole German nation.

Constitutional Power Clause Weighed by U.S.

Amendment or Special Corporation Likely if TVA Ban Is Upheld.

Associated Press.

An independent corporation to handle the Government's power program, or a constitutional amendment, were studied by Administration advisers yesterday for possible use in event the final judgment on TVA is adverse.

Officials agreed that the ruling of Federal Judge Grubb that TVA was without authority to sell surplus electricity would—unless reversed—cripple the plans of the Administration to force lower rates.

Although the sentiment of Federal officials was that TVA had met only a temporary set-back, they will be prepared to take a new tack if the judicial ban proves permanent.

The Administration is deeply committed to the plan of forcing cheaper power rates the country over through TVA and the like. This can not be done without the sale of surplus power from the project contemplated.

Drawbacks Seen.

Studies had already begun yesterday to determine whether an independent corporation or a constitutional amendment delegating the Government specific authority to sell power, could be used if it turns out that Justice Grubb is right. One power expert pointed out that both might have their drawbacks.

For instance, a corporation patterned along the lines of the Inland Waterways Corporation, might get out of Federal control. The process of obtaining approval of 36 States on a constitutional amendment probably would be long drawn out.

One immediate result of the Alabama opinion may be the decision not to press for Senate ratification of the St. Lawrence Waterways Treaty until the uncertainty is dissipated. The Administration has looked upon the St. Lawrence as one of its potential yardsticks to measure private rates.

Would Render Dams Useless.

Although work probably will go ahead on projects now under way, an adverse decision would make Boulder Dam, Bonneville Dam in Oregon, Grand Coulee in Washington, Fort Peck Dam in Montana, and Casper-Alcova in Wyoming, useless unless some way out is found. This today was quickening the search for satisfactory alternatives.

Expressing confidence that the Supreme Court will reverse the TVA ruling, Representative Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi), said last night that "to sustain the decision would turn the clock of progress back a hundred years."

Speaking before the Public Ownership League of America, Rankin said "An old regime dies hard." He referred to efforts of private power interests to block expansion of the TVA.

Most "Profitable Investment."

The speaker said the TVA "is the most profitable investment the American people have made in your day and mine."

Former Senator Smith W. Brookhart, of Iowa, urged Government ownership of the railroads, saying that farmers directly and laborers indirectly "are required to pay in excess rates an average of $10,000,000 per year in each State and they (the railroads) are asking for more."

A resolution for Government ownership of radio and all telephone and telegraph systems was adopted by the delegates.

Pending farm relief legislation was discussed by Senator Frazier (Republican), North Dakota, who said that to obtain agricultural parity "promised by both major parties" farmers must receive a lower rate of interest on debts, the cost of production, and regulation of handling of farm commodities between the producer and consumer.

Creation of a permanent CCC was advocated by D. S. Libbey, of the National Park Service.

Miss Johanna Busse Finds Instruments Tricky—Hot or Cold.

The only woman head of a bureau section, she lives in a world of thermometers, of shaved ice and molten tin, of cold hands and scorched finger tips, of 40 degrees below zero and 900 degrees above.

Her's is the thermometry section, and all its workers as well as its head are women, a personnel condition that exists nowhere else in the bureau.

To say that Miss Busse takes the Nation's temperature is to speak figuratively. But she does—she and the girls working with her—check for accuracy thermometers sent them by manufacturers throughout the Nation.

Finds Thermometers Tricky.

They put them in shaved ice, they immerse them in boiling water and oil and in molten tin, and they compare the temperature readings they give with standard gauges of proven accuracy. Then they slip them back, corrected.

Thermometers, according to Miss Busse, are tricky instruments, doing little more sometimes than to approximate temperatures, from the satndpoint of scientific precision, at least. This, she said, may be caused by the bulb which not only varies in the same type of instrument, but which changes size from time to time due to expansion and contraction.

Also, Miss Busse said, thermometer tubes frequently are of an uneven bore. Either of these variables may be sufficient to throw even the most scientifically made instrument off a fraction of a degree or more.

But for candy-making, oil and other industries, approximate temperatures won't do. Thus 30 years ago, the bureau set up the thermometry section where Miss Busse and her girls now calibrate as many as 300 thermometers a month.

For clinical thermometers — the kind the nurse sticks in your mouth —the calibration routine is augmented by a process which determines how long the thing has to be shaken before your temperature may be taken.

If the mercury fails to drop below 94 after the thermometer has been whirled briefly in a contraption that looks like a whirligig crossed with a washing machine, the instruments are rejected as liable to give hospital attendants stiff arms.

But as for Miss Busse, thermometers are her work-a-day world. For recreation, she flies her own plane, lives in the clouds, or above them. She loves science. She loves flying. She's tested thousands of thermometers. She's flown 160 hours, reached 11,000 feet.

"Some time ago," she said, "I decided I had reached the point where what happens to me will make very little difference."

Jobless Now Exceed 500,000 in France

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Feb. 24.—The terrific drain of more than $100,000,000 a year upon the French treasury to feed the unemployed was calculated today as unemployment figures topped 500,000, unprecedented in France and 44 per cent over last year.

Direct unemployment relief—the dole—through funds provided by the government and municipalities.

A huge public works program calling for expenditures of up to 12,000,000,000 francs ($800,000,000) in six years.

Cumberland Leads In Housing Drive

Frederick Second in State, Outside of Baltimore.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 24.—Cumberland is leading the cities of Maryland, outside of Baltimore, in the volume of work under way in the "better homes" campaign of the Federal Housing Administration, Arthur E. Hungerford, State director of the National Emergency Council, announced yesterday. Frederick is next, with Hagerstown third.

Owen E. Hitchins, chairman of the campaign, said a large number has been given employment. He said all banks are cooperating.

Hungerford announced that more than $5,000,000 in loans has been paid out by Maryland banks since the campaign opened several months ago. In addition, building and loan associations are making loans.

Watch Continued Over SandwichMan

Diet Blamed for Mental Turn of Fortune-Finder.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 24.—Frank Greges, the sandwich man made affluent by honesty, was somewhat more rational tonight, but was still under the observation of psychiatrists.

Greges, who went berserk yesterday at a hotel and cried out, "I can kill a man with a look"—and who did look at a man who then fell dead—appeared to be suffering from the effects of a rich diet after years of semistarvation.

A cerebral hemmorrhage might follow such a change of diet, said Dr. Carter N. Colbert, director of the psychiatric division, and this could be followed by mental disorder.

Pathological tests are continuing.

Greges, 67 year old, returned a wallet containing $42,000 worth of bonds which he had found. The publicity that attended his honesty brought him notoriety and money far beyond the meagre $5.50 a week which he earned as a sandwich man.

Plans Submitted For Flying School

Base at Elkins Would Offer Army Training.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Elkins, W. Va., Feb. 24.—Representative Jennings Randolph, of this city, has submitted plans to War Department officials for the establishment of a summer flying school in this city. A conference by various Army air officers is scheduled Monday in Washington with Brig. Gen. M. F. Andrews, commander of all tactical units of the Army Air Corps.

Because it is admitted Army pilots are deficient in mountain flying experience, Randolph said, the school would provide specialized training in such flying. Planes would fly from Elkins to Langley Field, Va., and use the Elkins municipal airport as a base.

Two Mrs. Fiermontes Sip Tea, See Love in Bloom for Enzo

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Feb. 24.—The two Mrs. Fiermontes, one American and one Italian, met for the first time today and sat right down to talk about a subject dear to their hearts—the handsome Enzo.

Mrs. Madeline Force Astor Dick Fiermonte, a member of one of America's wealthiest families, now second wife of the former pugilist, was entertaining at tea in her luxurious hotel suite.

The guests in fact were two other Mrs. Fiermontes, one of them Enzo's mother, and the other the fighter's sturdy, black-haired first wife, Tosca, who comes from Italian peasant stock.

"My son's wife is a dear," said Enzo's white-haired mother after returning to her humble apartment in a congested quarter.

"She's older than Enzo, but together they seem like two young people of the same age in love with each other."

Asked what she thought was Mrs. Astor Fiermonte's age, Enzo's mother said she believed she was "in her forties," while Enzo is 26.

"I am so happy that my boy is married to such a charming person who loves him so much," she said. "In the past both of them probably have made mistakes, but now that Enzo's mind is at rest about his son I am sure they are going to be happy together as soon as his passport is returned and they can go back to America."

The mother said Enzo and Mrs. Astor Fiermonte and the lawyer which the latter retained in Naples a week or two ago, had discussed a further financial settlement on Mrs. Tosca Fiermonte and her baby son, Giovanni.

Then tentatively agreed, she said, on $10,000 at the time of the divorce (which Enzo got in America) and 500 lire a month. Enzo has been providing for the child all that was necessary for the present, she said.

Moon's Pull Turning Earth's Day to Month

By the Associated Press.

Pasadena, Calif., Feb. 24.—The moon is very gradually but surely applying brakes to the earth's spin.

The gravitational pull of the earth keeps one side of the moon turned toward it. The pull of the moon is slowing the earth's rotation on its axis and some day, far in the future, it will keep one side turned toward the moon.

When that time comes the earth's day will be 47 times as long as it is now, astronomers calculate. The month is also lengthening, but more slowly, and eventually the month and day will be the same.

Dr. Seth B. Nicholson, astronomer of the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson Observatory tells of this in the current leaflet of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific.

Plot to Kidnap Girl Denied by Suspect

Says He Sought $5,000 for 'Revealing' Conspiracy.

By the Associated Press.

Quincy, Ill., Feb. 24.—Earl L. Bartlett, 36, radio repair man, arrested by Federal officers in connection with an alleged plot to kidnap Miss Dorothy Lois Mayne, 21, St. Louis, clung to his contention today that he had no part in the plot, but merely sought $5,000 for revealing it.

Bartlett was arrested here yesterday after Mrs. Emma M. Mayne, St. Louis, had received letters offering to disclose details of a reputed plan to kidnap her daughter for $25,000 ransom. The writer of the letters asked $5,000 for information, and directed the money be sent to a hotel here.

Bartlett was taken in custody when he appeared at the hotel where a dumy package was sent. He was taken before United States Commissioner John T. Ingram on a charge of missuse of the mails.

Messages Are Beginning to Reach Capitol Hill, They Report.

the committee to act further on the bill and that no word had come from the President of advice or admonition. Hence, this vital measure apparently is to hang fire unless the country is heard from and the confusion of mind, both in the New Deal and in Congress, abates to the point where there is reasonable prospect of getting together.

Some leaders report that letters and telegrams, arriving from all ends of the country, are having an effect in shaping the attitudes of Senators and Representatives. These messages, for the most part, center on the McCarran "prevailing wage" amendment, which the President said he would not tolerate, even vetoing the works bill if need be. However, organized labor stands stoutly for this wage, despite the warnings of economists and others who are convinced it would be the worst possible thing for labor itself.

What the upshot will be nobody ventures to predict, but responsible leaders of the Senate seem to be veering toward Glass's idea to separate out and put through an appropriation for direct relief, leaving the made-work, prevailing wage and other controversial points for later consideration. However, as Glass reports, there is upward of $176,000,000 available—as he has been advised—to tide the relief administration over during March, he sees no reason for haste.

Thereafter, the bill may be allowed to mark time while the embattled, conflicting forces shake down to more manageable attitudes. This is likely to try the patience of the politicians, and the President might take to the radio again to set up backfires under the more recalcitrant.

Curiously, Labor's fight for the prevailing wage amounts to playing the game of organized "big business," which wants the dole and now sees a chance that the squabble over the prevailing wage will kill off everything but the dole.

At this moment the situation is deadlocked. The President seems content to let the squabblers stew in their own juice. He retains the whip hand.

All this furore over the works bill is typical rather than exceptional, however. Much the same intensified battle surrounds other pending legislation. This Congress so far has done scarcely anything of importance in two months of the session. It begins to look as if the session would get increasingly ferocious and wind up in a characteristic last-minute rush before final adjournment.

If so, however, business will remain uneasy and apathetic waiting to see what the outcome is to be. Every interest of the New Deal demands that there be no overlong delay in settling the relief, power, NRA, banking and security program issues now pending. Until the country knows what is to come out of Congress, recovery is bound to lag.

Utilities Make a Stand.

The row over holding companies, itself, will be a major struggle, for the utilities, encouraged by Judge Grubb's blow at the constitutionality of TVA, are making a last stand. The NRA poses a staggering variety of vital, intricate issues on which there is the sharpest sort of division, with Borah, Nye and others shooting at NRA from the angle of small business allegedly oppressed by monopolistic domination of the big industries that dominated code writing.

The Longs, Townsends and others who would hand over oceans of ready money, gotten out of printing presses or out of the mythical abundance of wealth "at the top," are set to make a hash of the security program. As in the works bill, they always have a fine assortment of embarrassing maneuvers at their disposal. The bonus, silver, greenbacks, largesses in general for everybody, always are at hand to be thrust into every major bill that comes along. Routed on the works bill, the proponents of all such gifts and grants simply turn to the next big bill. Hence to beat them on one bill is not enough. The President has to rout them completely. To do so means to break with various groups, bloc and cliques hitherto held in line by the New Deal's popularity, its swift momentum and the hope that their pet rabbits would in time come out of the New Deal hat.

Banking Battle Threatens.

A titanic battle threatens, beyond all of these, over the banking bill, for, as Frank A. Vanderlip, former bank president, now a voice of the Committee for the Nation, stressed in a statement last night, this is "one of the most significant pieces of legislation" drafted in the last four or five decades.

He envisages it as a new link in the managed currency chain which the New Deal is striving to forge, and divines correctly that it presages setting up a commodity price index as the successor of gold as an index and guide to currency and credit management by the Government. Vanderlip wonders why the bankers have been so long silent about these implications. He, of course, is all for this transition, all for having the Government assume rigid controls, taking them away from private banking hands. He wants to have Congress write into the bill definite policy for future management of money under the commodity index guide. There are some who think the Supreme Court majority, by its rule that damages can be collected on a Liberty bond if loss of buying power can be shown, thus gave a certain perhaps unintended sanction to the new theory of managing currency on a commodity index, with gold as a relatively minor incident.

Vanderlip appears to think that by this rule as well as by the court's rule in the "hot oil" case, the court has sanctified, if not exactly sanctioned, having the Government take over all monetary control under specific mandate from Congress to manage the dollar according to the price index.

A Crucial Issue.

Clearly, this implies dethronement of gold as a first and fixed point of reference. It presents a crucial issue, far more vital in the end than any raised by the works bill. It is perhaps premature to dwell on the banking issue, since Senator Glass, chairman of the subcommittee which will consider it, has set no time for action as yet, pending disposal of the works bill.

He probably will summon an imposing array of orthodox witnesses, headed by Owen D. Young, James P. Warburg, Prof. O. H. W. Sprague of Harvard, and B. M. Anderson, jr., economist of the Chase Bank, among others, while the managed currency advocates will rely on Vanderlip, Prof. Irving Fisher, the Committee for the Nation generally and the "unorthodox" managed money proponents.

Meanwhile, the nomination of Marriner S. Eccles, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, hangs fire in the Glass sub-committee—a symbol of the impending battle between the gold orthodoxy and the New Deal's devalued dollar and managed currency.

On the side are the lesser but spectacular campaigns against "Farleyism," led by Long, encouraged by Republicans and by those Democrats dissatisfied with their share of spoils. Then there is the drive against publicity of income-tax returns. And in the offing are always innumerable other "issues" waiting a chance to make the headlines as their sponsors see an opening.

Presiding over all of this, actually, though not nominally or by constitutional division of powers, is the President, his leadership and command jeopardized as they have not been before. The prospect would mean sleepless nights for a less nerve-controlled, less confident man than Mr. Roosevelt, facing the Presidential conventions but little more than a year away. But he and his closest advisers believe that recovery is gaining headway, that many of the shadows which now darken the political and economic horizon will gradually evaporate. Nevertheless, Capitol Hill is storm beset as it has not been since Mr. Roosevelt took office. More than ever recovery alone will rescue the New Deal from the legislative threats and pitfalls now surrounding it.

Mellon Wants All Collectors To Help Gallery

lery known as the National Museum.

But the gallery which is to attract world masterpieces such as Mr. Mellon owns, it is believed, must be truly national and in addition, must have a high standard of quality which will be scrupultously observed.

The owner of a Rembrandt or a Raphael or a Titian, according to Mr. Mellon's associates, wants to be sure that his masterpiece will be in good company and not thrown in haphazardly with mediocre paintings.

Site Not Chosen.

Mr. Mellon by erecting a building and setting a high standard of quality with his own collection, proposes to create a magnet that will draw other historic paintings to Washington. The building he has in mind will be so designed that it will seem complete, and yet will lend itself to successive additions as the need arises.

The prize works in the Mellon collection, those of Raphael, Titan, Botticelli, Van Eyck and Perugino, will each have a room of its own, suitably draped and suitably lighted.

Mr. Mellon, it is understood, has not yet decided on a site for the proposed national gallery. While he was in Washington, he used to drive thruogh the city looking over many potential sites including one near Lincoln Memorial, another in the Mall, and another near the Capitol.

He wants the gallery to be just as accessible as the Capitol or the Washington Monument or any of the other great shrines in the National Capital.

While Huey Long and his followers might not see it in the same light, Mellon's friends here think that the proposed national gallery comes within the best American traditions of carrying out the "share our wealth" idea.

Like Andrew Carnegie, another Pittsburgh industrial giant, Mellon would enrich the minds of his fellow Americans. He would do it by making available to them works of art which have thrilled him for more than the fabulous fortune he has accumulated in his 80 years.

Four Others Bruised, Cut in Port Royal Crash.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 24.—Two persons, one in critical condition, are in the Mary Washington Hosptial tonight as a result of an automobile crash near Port Royal, when the car in which they and four others were riding, struck a dirt bank and turned over several times. James Skinner, 42, of Port Royal, was seriously injured. His companion, Ellis Jordan, 28, of Brandywine is suffering from a wrist and cuts and bruises.

The accident, occurred late this afternoon. Rebecca Hall, 15; Annie Hall, 18; Jack Hall, 22, and John Hall, 28, all of Brandywine, were treated at the hospital for cuts and bruises.

clusive Fly Club. Accompanied only by White House aids, he drove hastily to the family home and lost no time in settling down to the role he likes best—that of the country squire.

It was in that role that he rode about the estate this afternoon, with two large German police dogs at his horses heels.

On hand to welcome him home were his mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the John Boettigers, who came up from New York City to be with him. The other children are away—James Roosevelt in the South, Elliot at Washington and Franklin, jr., and John at Harvard.

White House headquarters were set up in a Poughkeepsie hotel, but Assistant Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre declared business was slight. The President attempted no work today, he said, and it was obvious he wants to get as much rest as possible before leaving Wednesday night to resume duties in Washington.

Tri-State Gangster Faces Trial Today

Wiley Held 'Trigger Man' in Weiss Slaying.

By the Associated Press.

Doylestown, Pa., Feb. 24.—The law tomorrow turns to remnants of the smashed "Tri-State" gang, bringing William Wiley, 27, to trial for the kidnap-slaying of William Weiss, Philadelphia night-life figure.

Wiley, for whom the death penalty will be asked, is alleged to have been the "trigger man" in the slaying attributed by police to the notorious mob which Bobby Mais and Walter Legenza headed before their execution in Richmond a month ago for a Virginia killing.

Three others are awaiting trial for the kidnap-killing and three more are held as accessories. Scheduled for trial after Wiley are Martin Farrell, 28, who with Wiley escaped from the Eastern Penitentiary last summer; Matthew Barrow, alias Matt Barratt, 36, and Robert James Eckert, 38, all of Philadelphia.

U. S. Chamber Opposes Baring Of Tax Returns

Information Is Often Used Improperly, Says Plea to Congress.

An appeal to Congress for immediate repeal of the publicity section of the income tax law was made yesterday by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Ae report of the Chamber's Federal Finance committee objecting to the publicity provision has been sent to business concerns throughout the country.

"The purpose of the income tax returns," the committee declared, is to enable the Government to obtain necessary revenues, and should not be a design for publishing private affairs to the world. No departure from this principle is justifiable.

"The information to be made public will disclose business and private affairs to competitiors, and will be used improperly in connection with securing credit ratings, locating prospects for selling campaigns of all sorts, for satisfying mere personal curiosity and for racketeering. Publicity will encourage crime, as the data will be a prolific source of information for those plotting kidnaping or other crimes."

The Chamber of Commerce report said that for more than a decade Wisconsin has required publicity in connection with State income taxes, and that a recent report of the State tax commission showed this has not been effective in bringing forth unreported income, but has had the opposite effect.

The report of the Chamber's committee also recommended restoration of the rights of closely affiliated groups to file consolidated income tax returns.

Bank Securities To Be Registered

SEC Sees 'No Ground' for Exempting Them.

By the Associated Press.

The securities and exchanges commission made public a letter yesterday by Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy stating it saw "no ground" for exempting bank stock issues from rules which would require registration with the commission of their listing on stock exchanges.

The bank stocks have been traded on an unlisted basis—which has temporarily exempted them from registration—on the New York Produce Exchange. The securities division of this exchange is to be terminated February 28, and bank stock interests sought permanent exemption from registration for them.

9 Army Planes Leave For Base in Alabama

Riverside, Calif., Feb. 24 (AP).—Bound on a "shakedown" flight, 39 army airplanes commanded by Capt. Ira C. Eaker took off from the March Field Army air base here at 3:30 a. m. today for Montgomery, Ala.

The planes, forming the Seventeenth Pursuit Group, are new, low-winged Boeings, whose 500-horsepower motors can develop 200 miles an hour. Each plane has a radio, two machine guns, and bomb rack.

20,000 Filipinos Seek Return to the Islands

San Francisco, Feb. 24 (AP).—About one-third of the 60,000 Filipinos in the Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain areas would like to go back to their native land.

This was disclosed here tonight by Edward W. Cahill, United States immigration commissioner, on the eve of a congressional inquiry into the advisability of appropriating federal funds to repatriate islanders weary of their increasingly uphill struggle in the United States.

Radio Calls Officer, He Finds Son Dead

By the United Press.

"Car 201, car 201, go to 194-18 One Hundred Sixteenth avenue, St. Albanys, boy found dead."

Keefe spurted to the address, siren screaming. He had no trouble finding it. It was his own.

In the basement he found his son, Charles, strangled by a string dangling from his football trousers as he chinned himself on a horizontal bar. The trousers were hanging from a rafter above. As he lowered himself his neck fell within the noose and he died unable to cry for help.

Baby Bonds Go On Sale Friday In Postoffice

Treasury Reports Receipt of Numerous Orders in Advance.

Many advance orders for purchase of "baby bonds" have been received, the Treasury announced yesterday. The requests, the announcement said, come from all sections of the country and are for all denominations of the bonds, ranging from the $25 bond, selling at $18.75, to the $1,000 bonds, selling at $750.

In spite of the orders, it was announced there would be no sale in advance of the general sale in 14,000 postoffices beginning Friday. The Postoffice Department has begun distribution of the bonds and has sent instructions to postmasters. An official circular describing the bonds and telling how they may be obtained has been sent to banks and postoffices and is available to the public.

Postal savings depositors, the Treasury announced, may withdraw their deposits to buy bonds without loss of interest. This will be accomplished by exchange of savings certificates for bonds.

Siamese King Is Silent On Foe's Assassination

London, Feb. 24 (AP).—Little King Prajadhipok of Siam at Cranleigh refused to comment today on the attempted assassination of Luang Bipul Songgram, minister of defense, at Bangkok yesterday.

London Siamese circles, it was disclosed, attach deep political significance to the wounding of the minister. He is regarded by the King's adherents as one of the leading figures in events which led Prajadhipok to leave the country and threaten to abdicate. He is said to be the power behind the scene in the party opposing the King.

Roxy, "Jobless" Again, Doesn't Blame "Losses"

Philadelphia, Feb. 24 (AP).—A "lot of applesauce" said S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel to reports today that the termination of his engagement as director of the Roxy-Mastbaum theater here is traceable to heavy box office losses.

The theater, which reopened under his direction nine weeks ago, will close again after Saturday. Roxy said he will return in the fall and meanwhile probably will be in New York, where "some negotiations" are now in progress.

Daiches Widow Sues For Insurance Share

Chicago, Feb. 24 (AP).—Mrs. Belle Daiches widow of Eli Daiches, slain advertising executive, today pushed civil action to collect $100,000 of the $300,000 insurance paid his firm.

Yesterday Irving Weitzman, diminutive owner of a bakery chain, was convicted of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment as the chief plotter behind the alleged insurance conspiracy killing. A motion for a new trial will be heard March 1.

Swimmer Fails Goal at 258 Miles

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, Feb. 24.—The brass band that accompanied the Argentine swimmer Pedro Candioti on the final stages of his 299-mile endurance swim to Bueanos Aires quit last night, and a few hours later Candioti did likewise.

Around 3 a. m. today, having covered 258 miles in 87½ hours of continuous swimming, the Argentinian gave up and crawled exhausted out of the water at Zarate, on the Plata River, only 41 miles from his goal.

It was claimed here, nevertheless, that he had set a world record.

The band accompanying Candioto played for the athlete from a launch that followed his progress. The swimmer entered the water at 11:50 a. m. last Wednesday at Santa Fe.

Foshay's 'Folly' Due On Market Again

Minneapolis, Feb. 24 (AP).—Foshay's "Folly"—the 32-story skyscraper designed after the Washington Monument and completed here in 1929, only to go into the hands of a receiver two months later, will go on the market for the twenty-second time in Federal court here tomorrow.

And the prospects—this time—are favorable for a transfer of the property. Federal Judge Gunnar Nordbye, before whom the sale is to take place, said the sale will, in effect, be merely a transfer of title to the bondholders, most of whom are in Chicago, where the bonds were sold.

Woman Shot to Death Trying to End Row

Chicago, Feb. 24 (AP).—Mrs. Anna Solar, 17-year-old expectant mother, was shot and fatally wounded here early today as she attempted to settle a quarrel between her father and a taxicab driver.

The girl's father, Frank Junior, told police the driver demanded more than Junior believed he owed, and that when Mrs. Solar examined the meter and agreed with her father's claim, the driver sped away, firing three shots through the window of their home. One bullet struck the girl in the forehead.

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 24 (AP).—Baron Maximilian von Romberg, Santa Barbara, Calif., sportsman, remained unconscious today at the hospital from a contusion of the brain received when he was thrown from his horse during a polo game Friday.

Dr. William E. Branch, his physician, said there was no skull fracture, and expressed the belief he would recover.

Culbertson on Bridge

New Deal.

Bridge has so many laws to govern the play, it is not surprising to find players in a quandary about some of them. Actually, there are nine less than a hundred but to some that number is multiplied by inference into thousands.

A man from Alabama writes me asking the difference between "Imperfect deals" and "Looking at cards during deals." He says, "Under the law there seems to be seven conditions, which constitute an imperfect deal, the last of which deals with exposed cards. The contention is that any card exposed constitutes a new deal and any player has the right to call for such. However, under the heading, 'Looking at cards during the deal,' it appears that only the player to the left of the dealer has that right.

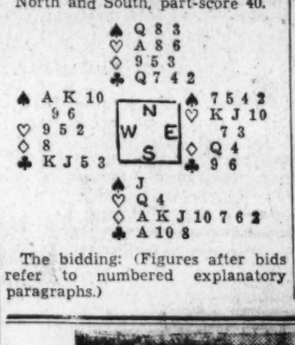
"Does this mean that should any player look at his cards during the deal and then a card is exposed, the player, left of that player who has looked at his card, has the right to also look at his and determine the deal?"

If during the deal a player looks at any of his cards and thereby causes a card to become exposed, his left-hand opponent may look at the cards already dealt him and decide whether the deal should continue or he should claim a new deal. No other player at the table may exercise the privilege of calling for a new deal unless this left-hand opponent chooses to waive his rights.

Pseudo Squeeze.

When all else fails, declarer's best plan is to make it difficult for the opponents to hold the right card. When one of the adversaries is a weak player who may assist declarer by not giving his partner a count on the hand, the pseudo squeeze is a most effective weapon. Today's hand was pulled out of the fire by just such a method.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.
North and South, part-score 40.



South	West	North	East
1◇	1♠	Pass	Pass
3◇	3♠ (1)	4◇	4♠ (2)
5◇ (3)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—A dangerous bid. North's previous pass, however, induces West to believe North will not double.
2—A good sacrifice bid.
3—South does not expect to gain much by setting the opponents and hopes there will be a good play for five diamonds.

The Play.

West opened the spade King and shifted to a heart when declarer's Jack fell. Dummy ducked, and East won with the King. Had a club been returned at this point, all would have been over. But the East player (the weak member of the partnership) returned a heart. Declarer won with the Queen, and laid down the Ace and King of trumps. The trump nine was the entry to the Ace of hearts, on which the ten of clubs was discarded. A club was then led to the Ace, after which declarer played the remaining four trumps.

With the first three of these West had no great trouble, but when the fourth appeared, West was down to the Ace of spades and the King of clubs. He could not tell which to save. On the first three trumps East had discarded two hearts and a spade instead of the more illuminating three spade discards. Had the latter been done, West would have realized there were no more spades in declarer's hand and would have kept the King of clubs. As it was, West's only clew was declarer's false-card of the club ten. West discarded the King of clubs, and declarer made the contract.

Doomed Slayer 'Squeals' On Gang, Paper Reports

New York, Feb. 24 (AP).—The Daily News says the fear of Sing Sing's electric chair has induced Leonard Scarnici, sentenced to die for the killing of a detective, to reveal information which brought the arrest of a bank robber gang.

The news said that on Scarnici's tips, Federal agents had been able to capture Harry Shaw in New City, N. Mex.; Bebe White, described as the sweetheart of one of the gang, and Benjamin Lieberman, Hannah Weintraub and George Burger, all suspected members of a band which took almost $100,000 from New York and New Jersey small town banks in the last two months, officials said.

SHADOWS in PARADISE

By INEZ WALLACE

"HELLO, sweet. How are you?" It was Nome's voice over the telephone. "I'm all right."

"Well, I'm not—and I'm not going to be such a fool as to lie about it. I had to call you, dear. Twenty-four hours have been enough for me. I'm licked. I haven't slept all night and I've called you up to tell you something. I love you. I can truthfully say it now because it's true. Haven't you anything to say to me, sweetheart?"

"What can I say?" I asked helplessly. "I don't know what to do.

"Well, I know. I'm coming down to see you tonight. The manager will let me off early and one of the chaps from town will fly me down in his plane."

"You'll get killed."

Oh, the joy of that laugh! The vital, rollicking joy of it!

"Don't worry, angel. It's moonlight and he's flown it hundreds of times. Where'll you be?"

"I've a bungalow. You'll have to come there, I guess—though I really wouldn't know. What will people say?"

"Does Lawson know about this?"

"Yes."

Her Face Told All.

"All right. Tell him I'm coming down to see you. He'll fix everything. I'll be with you in a few hours and in the meantime remember I love you."

I hung up the phone softly—shook the tears from my eyes and went back to the dining room.

Lawson, rising and handing me my napkin, smiled wickedly.

"Congratulations," he said. "I hope you won't mind that I ordered some coffee to stimulate me till you returned. What were we talking about?"

"Aren't you going to ask me what's happened?"

"What'd I ask you for, when it's printed all over you? Really, Helen, all you lack right now is a halo. I do envy you, though. I wish I could lose my troubles so easily."

"Well," I said slowly, "if you don't tread on the heights, you never have to walk in the valleys." Then suddenly, "Ralph's coming down tonight."

"He is? How's he going to get here. I didn't know there was a means of transportation that would fit in with his hours and this place. But I suppose love has found a way."

I explained, "I don't know just when he'll arrive, but I told him to come over to the bungalow. Nobody'll know it," I ended happily.

"Of course not. All he has to do is to come busting in here in the middle of the night and nobody'll ever hear him. An airplane doesn't make a sound in the night, especially in the desert. What are you trying to do—make the front page just as we're finishing 'Evening Song'? We want publicity—but not that kind."

"Well, I told him that, but he said you'd fix it."

Out in the lounge the manager paused for a friendly comment. "How's the picture going, Mr. Lawson?"

"Fine, thanks. A little complication on the phone tonight with Miss Burns' leading man, but nothing serious. We'll get it ironed out. By the way, he and a friend of his are flying down for a hurried conference and may not get in till late. I've told them to go directly to Miss Burns' bungalow and I'll see them there. Don't let their arrival disturb you."

"Perfectly all right, Mr. Lawson. Perfectly."

The Plane Arrived.

I heard the plane before I could see it—and it did make a frightful racket in the stillness. I was glad Lawson had talked to the manager. I was glad of everything. It was getting nearer, nearer. They were landing.

Then I saw Ralph running along the little path through the palm trees. Even without the lights in the bungalow I believe he would have known where to come.

"My darling!"

Time stood still.

At last he pushed my hair back from my forehead and looked down at me, his face like a cameo in the moonlight. "Tell me one thing—do you love me?"

"Yes."

It was the end of the world—and the beginning.

This Was Heaven.

All my life I shall remember Palm Springs.

When everything else is gone, there will still be the moon and the mountains and the memory of a love that ran, like a melody, through the glamorous desert night. There will still be the sand dunes, at dawn, covered with desert flowers—a dream turned into reality with the morning. There will be the Adonis-like figure of Ralph Nome on horseback silhouetted against a turquoise sky and his golden voice singing.

Then the brisk dip in a pool, still touched with the chill of the night, and the cozy breakfast in my bungalow sitting room while Lawson kindled a fire in the grate—which, try as he would, he could not make as cheerful as the one that burned in my heart. Later there was the parting for a few days, every minute of which would be eternity. We saw them off from the landing field—and did you ever know how much can be conveyed in a handclasp? As he stepped into the plane Ralph's big, firm hand closed over mine, enveloped it entirely. There was laughter in his eyes but his voice had a ring of sincerity as he said, not "Good-by" but "Don't worry."

An Unexpected Call.

Never in my picture experience have I seen a production progress so rapidly. Everything we did was just right and we finished our exteriors hours ahead of schedule, working almost without a rehearsal. Lawson had just come in to my bungalow to say that, as we were finished, there seemed no use of staying longer and we would drive back to Hollywood by moonlight. He left to order an early dinner and I was packing when the phone rang. Ralph was not supposed to call me until 10 o'clock, after his dinner show—but——

"How are you, sweet?"

"I'm all right but I didn't expect to hear from you so early. How'd you know we are leaving for home?"

"I'm a mind-reader, sweet. No, honestly, I never dreamed you were through. If you want the truth, I couldn't wail until 10 o'clock to talk to you. Woman, am I glad you're coming home? Listen, can you stop in at the hotel—if only for a minute?"

"Oh, Ralph, I can't. I'm dead tired and I'll look just terrible. I'm keeping on my riding breeches and my last clean khaki shirt simply isn't."

"Well, sweet, I'm going to see you tonight somehow. Don't think for a moment that you're coming home and not see me. I'll tell you what—I'll dash out to your house between shows, just to kiss you good night and tuck you in bed."

"What?"

"I'm teasing you, monkey. But I'll see you immediately after my dinner show. Hurry home, now, and don't let that chauffeur drive too fast. I'm not carrying any spare for you."

I had a sinking feeling when I went to visit Vera next day, that she was going to call me to account for something. I could see a meaningful gleam in her eye. And I was not mistaken.

"About this Nome guy," she began, without introduction, selecting a cigarette and settling back in her favorite wicker rocker. "What in time are you trying to do, anyhow?"

"Why, how do you mean?"

"Don't stall with me, Helen. You know what I mean. You've lost your head over a crooner and he has you going 'round in circles, that's what. I've kept quiet, but I've had a ringside seat for this show, and, if you ask me, it looks like he's had all the breaks. First, you give him the lead in your picture—which every band man in Hollywood would give his right eye to have played. If that was all, it would be jake.

"But he's married. All the columnists had a yarn about it last week—his wife's a big shot from New York and she gives out in an interview that she's not at all worried about any blonde film star in Hollywood. They're in perfect harmony, according to her. Well, maybe I'm wrong, but you don't strike me like a girl who'd have to pinch hit for any absent heiress. Oh, I believe he's in love with you, all right. I'll give him that much credit. But what interests me is, what's he going to do about it?"

"Go on."

"I will. I'm just stopping for breath. Now it's bad enough that he calls her up every night way across the continent——"

Every One Talked.

"How'd you know that?"

"Read it in the paper, dearie. His wife gave it all out in her interview. You see, Helen, you've put this boy in a class where he's good copy."

"Oh, I don't know," loftily. "He was doing pretty well for himself before I ever saw him. Any one would think to hear you talk that I took him out of the gutter."

"I'm coming to that, too. Are you going crazy to be seen at his restaurant most every night after all the lectures I've given you about keeping yourself out of the spotlight when you're not on the screen?"

"Vera—for heaven's sake, nobody goes to that place to see me."

"They don't? Well, let me tell you something, young lady. Every movie-struck girl in town goes between the dinner and supper show, if she can raise the price, just in the hope that you'll come in and she'll get a chance to hear Ralph Nome sing to you. It's the talk of the town that he stops everything and signs the minute you put you foot in the place."

To be contined tomorrow.

Warning Given Of New Caesar By Dr. Johnson

Howard University's Head Sees Need for Creeds Working Together.

Citing Howard University as a place where Christian, Jew and Mohammedan had learned to work together on a basis of individual and collective freedom, Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, university president, before an overflow audience yesterday in Rankin Memorial Chapel, expressed hope that representatives of these groups throughout the world would learn to work together without antagonism.

"It is the new nationalism, and modern aggressive religion," he said, "which is causing Jew, Mohammedan and Catholic to suffer. In Russia religion has been reduced to an insignificant factor. The Catholic faith is struggling for its life in Mexico, and Protestantism is subordinated to the state in the land of Martin Luther, where their principle of race integrity denies the unity of mankind.

"These are dangerous signs of a new Caesar in the world who exalts the hegemony of the state above that of individual conscience. There is a power which, in the midst of international imperialistic competition, will not permit the nations to relax their economic organizations and give of their plenty to bring about the more abundant life.

"In this crisis the entire body of humanity affected by imperialism of European nations is of greater consequence to us than our own Nation if Christianity is to be incarnate in the earth. The United States exists to be an instrument of humanity for the entire world, if there is ever to be an international peace."

The platform from which Dr. Johnson spoke was decorated with flowers contributed by "neighbors of the university."

Iowa U. Board Scans Charges of Brutality

By the United Press.

Iowa City, Feb. 24.—Eugene A. Gilmore, president of the University of Iowa, met with the school's disciplinary board today to discuss charges that men students of the university were:

"Pitiably beaten until their eyes were shrunken and bloodshot and their backs solid masses of black and blue welts; given enormous doses of castor oil and then sent on errands to inconvenient places; compelled to go for days with only brief snatches of sleep now and then on concrete floors in basements; forced to wear rude clothing made of hempen sacking—which was placed on their beaten and bleeding backs—while they performed ridiculous errands under the watchful eyes of spies."

The charges were made by an unnamed mother in a letter to President Gilmore revealing alleged practices of Greek letter societies during their annual "hell week" preceding initiation of new members.

Stories About the Pictures You're Seeing

Hollywood, Feb. 22.

"SEQUOIA." This was previously titled "Malibu," but the name was changed because Metro believed that audiences would believe it was about Malibu Beach. It is called "Sequoia" because a large portion of the picture was shot at the Sequoia National Park. The flicker was in production for a year and a quarter, off and on. There were many times that Metro thought they wouldn't be able to get a picture out of it. Despite the length of time in production, it was not expensive to make, costing about $300,000. The director, Chester Franklin, got about $250 a week, and the cameraman, Chet Lyons, about $125 a week. The deer and other animals didn't get a Joan Crawford salary.

Lyons and Franklin deserve much credit, for despite many obstacles they turned out a fine picture which will be a box-office winner; yet shortly after "Sequoia" was released Franklin was released and is now out of work.

The deer that you see in the beginning of the picture is not the one that you see at the end. Deer are sensitive, perishable performers, and more than one was often needed to complete one sequence. The director and cameraman had to resort to many tricks to gain the desired effects. In order to get the two deer to kiss each other, which they didn't want to do, molasses had to be rubbed on the noses of each deer. They went to lick off the molasses and thus the kissing effect was photographed.

IT WAS very difficult to get a deer to register expressions. They have no eyebrows to tilt in the manner of your favorite movie star. Subterfuges had to be used to get the animal to act, and in one instance the grips (stage hands) turned handsprings to make a deer register a startled expression. Cameraman Lyons labored under a special handicap. He needed bright lights to photograph the sequences, and soon learned that deer are afraid of light and don't venture out while the sun is shining. A deer will eat its breakfast between 4 and 7 in the morning and will not be seen again until the sun starts disappearing at 5 o'clock. On a moonlight night the deer can always be seen grazing, but you can't shoot pictures with moonlight. Cameraman Lyons had to wait for hours with his set-up and shoot despite the light changes in the particular scene. He discovered that the deer and the other animals liked the artificial "inky" light better than the natural sunlight.

One of the most amazing sequences in "Sequoia" is the scene in which the Chinese baby is playing and the rattlesnake, threatening, is close by. The studio officials themselves were startled when they saw the rushes. For a real child and a genuine rattlesnake were used, and they wondered how the Chinese baby went unharmed. Many cameramen don't know how this scene was filmed. The baby and the rattlesnake were only 6 inches apart, but an ordinary plate glass window protected the child from the snake. The scene was photographed through the plate glass window, which doesn't show up in the picture—a simple device, but no one had thought of doing it before.

"FOLIES BERGERE." This is Darryl Zanuck's annual musical production, and he didn't spare any money to make it. He purchased the world-famous title "Folies Bergere," and for a story bought the screen rights to the play, "The Red Cat." The picture was in production nine weeks and cost about $725,000—$100,000 of this being necessary for the cost of shooting the French version, which was made at the same time.

Merle Oberon was imported, with the permission of Alexander Korda, to play the lead in the English version, and Princess Paley was imported to play Miss Oberon's role in the French version. Also special models had to be hired to play in certain of the French sequences, for the American lassies suddenly became bashful and didn't want to appear before the camera without certain articles of apparel.

"SWEET MUSIC." The original title of this was "Say It With Music," but it was discovered that Irving Berlin owned the title and Warners didn't want to pay him what he thought it was worth. The picture was four weeks in the making and cost about $225,000, a surprisingly small amount for a big musical. Rudy Vallee received $50,000 for making the picture, and Britton's band got $10,000 Rudy was more comfortable working in this one than he was in "Scandals," and was really well liked when he left the studio. He gave Director Al Green, the cameraman, the grips, and scenario writer, Jerry Wald—with whom he once battled in New York—gifts, a token of his appreciation. Rudy Vallee photographs much better in this flicker because Make-up Artist Perc Westmore lifted his eyebrows by artificial means.

'Drill or Else—' Students Warned

West Virginia Objectors Call Protest Meeting.

By the Associated Press.

Morgantown, W. Va., Feb. 24.—A meeting to protest compulsory military training at West Virginia University has been called by several students for Wednesday night—24 hours after the deadline set by university officials for the dropping of all students who refused to take the course.

Dean W. P. Shortridge, of the college of arts and sciences, tonight stated that notices have been sent to 12 students who have refused to sign, warning them that failure to enroll by Tuesday will cause their suspension.

The Morgantown Ministerial Association meets tomorrow to decide whether it will take part in the protest. The Rev. William G. Gehri, pastor of the Trinity Episcopal Church, said: "I am quite sure that nothing of a rash nature is contemplated. We hope to attack the problem by offering a substitute, possibly forestry, for military training. I believe the problem is essentially one for the State Legislature in that it is its acts which direct that military training shall be given and the university board of governors only prescribes how it shall be given."

A Proper Rebuke.

Senator Gore's reply to the mayors of two Oklahoma towns who tried to intimidate him deserves inscription in a niche where all legislators may read it. In matters pertaining to his duty as a representative of the people the blind Senator has unusually keen perception. And his courage in the face of political threats is not open to question.

The mayors of Haleyville and Hartshorn had ordered Senator Gore to vote for the $4,880,000,000 public works resolution "or stay out of this county in the next senatorial race." Apparently the Senator welcomed this impudent challenge to his integrity as an opportunity to express his resentment against political intimidation in general. He replied:

> Your telegram intimates that your votes are for sale. Much as I value votes, I am not in the market. I can not consent to buy votes with the people's money. I owe a duty to the taxpayer as well as to the unemployed. I shall discharge both.
> None but the bully resorts to threats, and none but the coward yields to them.

Regardless of whether Senator Gore is for or against the public works measure, the rebuke he has administered to politicians trying to control his vote is a remarkable precedent. It is a known fact that orders—most of them more tactfully couched than the mandate from Haleyville—are frequently sent to members of Congress by political bosses. That Congressmen sometimes yield to these special interests is one of the most serious weaknesses in our governmental structure.

Only when groups seeking special privileges and political lobbyists are put in their place can legislation be lifted above the level of the pork barrel. Senator Gore's declaration of independence from influence of this sort is especially salutary at a time when it is broadly hinted that political pressure will be applied from the constituencies of dissenting Senators to revive discredited measures.

No Apology Required.

The mild whimsy indulged in by Mr. Walter Lippmann in an address at George Washington University will distract no one. At a ceremony in which seven newspapermen, himself included, received honorary degrees as acknowledgement of the contribution of the newspaper correspondent to education he lightly admitted some apprehension of criticism. Friends of the correspondents so honored may say, he suggested, that it was bad enough for the President to make politicians out of professors, but it is going to be even worse if university presidents start making professors out of newspapermen.

No one will take Mr. Lippmann's fears seriously for, in the first place, such an introduction of the essentially practical viewpoint into the otherwise theoretical considerations of the academicians might not be without its distinct advantages. In the second place, no one would be quite simple enough to deride what is a patent fact, namely, that the university and the newspaper are already closely related inasmuch as each aims at the education and enlightenment of the people it serves.

While no one in the newspaper fraternity has ever expected that his daily stint required such formal honors, it is nonetheless gratifying for the profession to learn that its endeavors are not passed by unnoticed. It is, moreover, indicative of the broad outlook of the university's president, Dr. Marvin, and his associates that they should thus express appreciation of the worth of independent and intelligent reporting in a world bewildered by the very intricacies of its own affairs.

The Case Of Panama.

A year ago the United States tendered $250,000 in devalued currency, worth 59 per cent of its former gold value, to the Republic of Panama in payment of rental on the Canal Zone. Panama refused to accept this sum, on the ground that under the treaty of 1904, the United States had agreed to make payment in gold dollars. Since the Supreme Court has ruled that the United States has no power to invalidate the gold clause in its own obligations, Panama believes that its demand for payment in gold dollars of the old weight and fineness (or their equivalent) is strengthened.

To be sure the ingenious reasoning of the majority opinion appears virtually to have closed the Court of Claims to petitioners seeking to establish the fact that they have been damaged by abrogation of the gold clause in governmental contracts. However, the case of Panama presents an exception in a number of respects, which may require special treatment for that republic. In the first place, payment was pledged by the United States under a treaty negotiated with a sovereign state—a fact which gives the creditor a privileged status in applying for damages. In the second place, there is no doubt that Panama has suffered substantial loss through the action of this Government in abrogating the gold clause.

Even if a way should be devised, however, to indemnify Panama for our failure to fulfill the terms of the original contract, the decision of the Supreme Court appears to have erected impregnable barriers against recovery of losses suffered by foreign and nonresident holders of obligations of the United States. Such losses remain to reproach our Government for failure to honor the terms of its contract with creditors and to invite criticism from defaulting debtor states that have been held up so often to public scorn in this country.

The Underlying Moral.

The Administration has suffered two signal rebuffs during the past week through a Senate revolt which has jeopardized its work relief bill, and a judicial decision, which, if sustained by the Supreme Court, would largely nullify its ambitious power program. The difficulties which have arisen thus unexpectedly are a direct result of the characteristic impetuosity with which the Administration has attempted to extricate the country from depression by urging immediate passage of remedial legislation without thorough consideration of its economic and social implications.

During the honeymoon period, Congress meekly passed various carelessly drawn laws of doubtful constitutionality, without taking time to debate their merits. "Emergency" became a magic watchword which for a time was successfully employed to overcome legislative opposition and to silence doubts.

Similar overemphasis upon the necessity of doing something at once to facilitate recovery led the Administration to embark upon development of extensive power projects to compete with privately owned utilities, without waiting to determine the constitutionality of such proceedings. On the contrary, the effort of representatives of private power groups to hasten such a test encountered official opposition that has delayed a "showdown" on this important issue.

As a result of this combination of haste in action and dilatoriness in securing a judicial review of its actions, the Administration now finds its recovery program menaced on two strategic fronts.

Hasty improvisation and execution of emergency plans have at length aroused Congress to a realization of the need for thinking before acting. The lesson has been forced home to some extent because of the fact that a good many billions of dollars have already been spent by the Government in a vain endeavor to restore prosperity. With millions of men and women still unemployed, there is a growing perception of the advisability of limiting executive discretion, especially insofar as spending activities are concerned.

The public is also beginning to understand that constitutional limitations upon governmental activities are not simply a formality but a very real safeguard against executive indiscretions that may result in loss of taxpayers' money and misdirection of energy. Even more important perhaps, is the growing realization that the cause of good government is not served by rushing through emergency laws that may modify the economic system and transform the political structure in ways neither intended nor desired.

Certainly the events of the past week should be a salutary warning against the enactment of legislation that has not been carefully thought out. The intransigent Senators who have tried to foist an impossible program upon the country have at least aroused support for continuation of direct relief as a preferable alternative to any kind of unplanned scheme of public works. The uncertainties surrounding the status of the TVA have also definitely raised the fundamental question of the extent to which the socialization of the power industry is legally permissible. Although these and other important issues are still undecided, they have been brought forcibly to the attention of the country. In the future, it will be perilous for any administration to ignore them when new plans for recovery are under consideration.

The Housing Dilemma.

Every survey of housing for the lower-income groups in Washington brings forth a sorry tale. Large families are crowded into miserable shacks. Many of the dwellings for which exorbitant rent is charged lack proper heat, ventilation and sanitary facilities. Yet they continue in use because there is nowhere else for families in poor circumstances to go.

The current report by a group of District women reemphasizes the deplorable conditions which have been previously surveyed by the Public Utilities Commission, the Alley Dwelling Authority and private investigators. It serves as a reminder that the elimination of disease-infested alleys is only one part of Washington's housing problem. The acute need for modern low-cost quarters will not be overcome merely by converting these hidden slums to other uses. In fact, the alley clearance program may reduce the quarters available to families with meager incomes, because part of this property will be used for garages, playgrounds and other non-residential purposes.

No doubt the root of the problem is the inadequacy of income for families that inhabit insanitary dwellings. But that does not excuse a policy of indifference or inaction. In many cases the rental charged for squalid shacks is sufficient to cover the interest and amortization of carefully planned modern dwellings. One reason why families are compelled to pay unreasonable rates for quarters unsuitable for habitation is that no comprehensive movement to supply proper housing facilities of this type has been carried out.

The paradox of idle men seeking work while idle capital piles up in the banks is sharply accentuated when the housing needs of this and many other communities are brought into the picture. More and better living quarters are urgently needed. More residential construction for the low-income groups seems to be one of the prime essentials to recovery. If private industry is not interested in this field it is one in which Government intervention could not retard recovery.

Good And Bad Trusts.

It must be difficult for Donald R. Richberg to arouse public support for a new NRA law since nobody knows what form that legislation will assume when Congress begins to consider amendments to the present act. However, the administrator of NRA appears to be convinced that it needs to be protected against restoration of the sweeping prohibitions of the antitrust laws. As on many previous occasions, he emphasizes the necessity of flexibility in any law providing for the organization of industry. Cooperation within or between industries is, as he states, impossible under the antitrust laws, unless they are interpreted in accordance with the rule of reason.

In other words, some agreements among competitors in restraint of trade are good, not only for those directly concerned, but also for the public. On the other hand, monopolies demonstrably against the public interest can and should be banned. Under a hard and fast law, it is impossible to draw the line between combinations which suppress unfair and uneconomic trade practices and those that represent oppressive restraints upon competitive enterprise.

In the past, efforts of the Federal Trade Commission to encourage reasonable agreements among competitors have often been nullified by the prosecuting zeal of the Department of Justice. Moreover, the rigid character of the antitrust laws virtually compelled the authorities to institute suits against good as well as bad trusts, unless the law were to be disregarded.

Under the NRA, the antitrust laws have been greatly liberalized but their status still remains inadequately defined, while there is always danger that undiscriminating legislative assaults upon monopolies will lead to restoration of these laws in full force and vigor. Economic freedom is often sacrificed instead of being saved by legislative efforts to enforce competition at any cost. Mr. Richberg has constantly endeavored to force home that truth by emphasizing the necessity of interpreting the antitrust laws in the light of present-day conditions.

Beethoven The Man.

The discovery of many original manuscripts and some 250 letters by Ludwig van Beethoven has just been disclosed by an authority on the composer. The scores found will correct many current versions of the master's work, including his famous Ninth Symphony, which was finished 111 years ago this month, and the Piano Concerto in G Major. Among the unknown items found in this collection was a humorous canon carrying the words, "Worthy magistrate, you are freezing."

There are probably many more Beethoven manuscripts still in obscurity. Six months after his death, an auction was held to dispose of his original texts, but so inadequately was it advertised that no publishers of note were present to bid. As a result, some manuscripts were torn and sold movement by movement, with parts of the same work going to different people.

Naturally the current discovery is of major importance to the world of music. But its value to the public in general should not be underestimated, since it affords a new insight into the character of the aloof composer. Beethoven's early life was burdened with family and financial responsibilities which, no doubt, were the cause of his later impetuous irascibility. His deafness, also, was probably a contributing factor to the qualities which moved one of his biographers to describe him as "imperious, inaccessible and brusque."

It is refreshing to learn, therefore, that Beethoven had another and more human side to his character. The words, "Worthy magistrate, you are freezing" are suggestive of the delightful nonsense of Gilbert and Sullivan. Aside from its significance in musical circles, the new discovery may afford an illuminating and endearing facet in the delineation of the great composer's personality.

An Encouraging Sign.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A resolution to establish a one-chamber legislature in Utah has been killed by the lower house of that State. There is nothing surprising about this. The legislature of Nebraska steadfastly refused to submit the reform which Senator Norris finally put through by taking the issue directly to the people through the initiative. By and large, members of legislatures naturally take the same attitude as bureaucrats toward proposals to reduce the size of branches of government of which they are a part.

Even so, the sentiment in various legislatures in favor of following the example of Nebraska is notable for its extent. Several States, including Montana and Michigan, have before them bills to keep the bicameral arrangement, but with a marked decrease in membership. Bills in 13 State Legislatures—those of Missouri, California, Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming—provide for assemblies patterned after the Norris plan.

The most wrenching change is that proposed in the Washington Legislature. This would do away with a House of 99 members and a Senate of 46 members and set up instead a single chamber of 24 full-time legislators, each paid a monthly salary of $400 for supervising a State department.

"Amusing" Conservatism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Either a subtle humor or an ignoring of the facts must account for Raymond Clapper's comments on the political situation in The Post of February 22. The idea of the country turning to Mr. Roosevelt as a safe and sane conservative is highly amusing.

"Can the leopard change its spots?" A man's record is a pretty sure indication of his future actions. If the most wasteful extravagance in the history of the United States, the most scandalous disregard of the civil service, the constant antagonism toward business and the condoning of persistent attempts by Government officials to socialize industry and agriculture, coupled with a continuing disregard for the rights and liberty of "the forgotten man" is proof of conservative rightism, then Mr. Farley is a reincarnation of George Washington.

Of course, there are some who still retain their faith in the potent legerdemain of the New Deal. But the great mass of the American people, whose daily decreasing lack of confidence in Rooseveltian cure-alls is the principal reason for delayed recovery, will not be convinced of the Administration's conservative soundness until the following things happen: The spending orgy is stopped; the arrogant, autocratic attitude of Administration officials ceases; the injustice and injury being done by the AAA and the NRA are admitted and steps taken to ease them out of the picture; the political racketeers and patronage parasites as represented by Farley are dismissed from the Government service; the radicals and subversive underminers of our Government and American liberty and ideals are cast into utter darkness, and the American Government is actually run for the benefit of the American people. Then——!

He "Never Had A Mistress."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to call your attention to an historical error in the article by Miss Frances Mangum, published in The Post on February 17. Miss Mangum asserts that Ninon de L'Enclos was the mistress of Cardinal Richelieu.

I have no intention of extending my criticism to the entire article—which I consider an insult to the women of Washington—nor my defense to either the internal or foreign policies of the cardinal. But I do assert that, on the basis of all the available historical evidence, Richelieu never had a mistress. He has been accused of many misdeeds, but his moral character, in this respect, was above reproach.

As a former student of the Sorbonne, I should greatly appreciate a correction of this canard.

JOHN J. O'CONNOR.

"American" Forum.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I think the school board made a grave mistake in denying the Washington Open Forum the use of a building to hold its public discussion meetings. This is a liberal but orderly group which has been holding free open meetings for several years and has been addressed by Catholic priests, Christian ministers and Jewish rabbis, as well as by those who are nonchurch members but who are interested in humanitarian movements and the public welfare.

It may be true that the president of the forum leans a little to the "left" on certain matters, but there is a responsible board of directors made up of Republicans, Democrats, Liberals and others who stand for a more decided change in the economic and social set-up. The Open Forum is thus a typical American institution.

The point for the school board to bear in mind is not whether the ideas discussed are individually pleasing to each member of the board or to the group, but whether a discussion of public questions is a matter of education and worthy of intelligent men and women.

It seems to me that Commissioner Studebaker's campaign for open forums is not getting support here.

Hoover Nostalgia.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After two long years in President Roosevelt's monetary wilderness, America is heartened to find Herbert Hoover again pointing the way to solid recovery.

We will resume the march of progress, when the free gold standard is restored.

For three treacherous years President Hoover fought the depression like a man. Never did he compromise on sound money. Never did he give ear to the immoral counsel of national repudiation.

An honest dollar, strict fidelity to the Government's bond, an unceasing fight for a balanced budget—these were the foundation stones which supported the strong surge of recovery felt in every field of American economy during the summer of 1932.

Then came Roosevelt and his Brain Trust with all the old hallucinations on free silver, free trade, and free lunch. Soon the New Deal had kicked out all the solid foundations of recovery so dearly bought with the Nation's anguish and suffering.

Since March, 1933, "emergency" has followed "emergency," brainstorm followed brainstorm. And now, having shot some $13,000,000,000 into the air, we find the very wells of credit poisoned by the degrading policy of government repudiation. Meanwhile, our fundamental problem remains. We still carry more than 10,000,000 unemployed.

No one can say how long it will be before President Roosevelt gives hand to a real recovery program. But when and if he ever does, it will be the program advanced by Herbert Hoover in 1931-32—first, an unchanging and unchangeable gold dollar, secondly, a balanced Federal budget.

"Successful Politician."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I suggest that Mr. W. E. Ryan make check on Senator Borah's speeches in Virginia and North Carolina against Gov. Smith in 1928 and acquaint himself regarding statement made by me that the Senator was more or less of a bigot in that campaign.

Any careful observer understands that Borah is a highly successful politician and knows where to make his speeches to best advantage, and that is probably the reason Mr. Ryan failed to hear them in New York. However, he is not pulling any wool over the eyes of many Catholics in this Mexican game.

C. R. COTTON.

Prices And Pensions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In connection with his old-age revolving pension plan, Dr. Townsend has said: "A rate of 2 per cent should be sufficient, if levied on all sales, to meet the pension roll." This tax is called a transaction sales tax, but, to my mind, it is suspiciously like our old friend, the general sales tax.

This tax if levied upon the products of our farms and factories would be multiplied many times before the products reached the hands of the consuming public and tend to double prices.

No doubt exists that any plan which will place money into the hands of the general public, will surely raise the price level upon the necessities of life. But will not this plan hit mostly the poorer class of the working people? Take a man working for $20 a week, for instance. Perhaps he has two or three small children. Can he stand the pressure of having his grocery bill doubled and his rent increased to twice its present size? The plan will in no way benefit him unless he has some one in the family who comes under the rules of the plan and receives the old-age benefits.

If some way could be devised to protect this class of worker, the plan would no doubt take on a more favorable aspect, as increased purchasing power is at this time greatly needed in business.

NEWELL B. DAVIS.

Innnocent Error.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I, before anyone who may have read "Writer's Dilemma" beats me to it, explain that my transference of the sex of M. Chateaubriand was the result of careless proofreading and neither ignorance on my part nor an attempt to change the facts of life? K. S.

Washington, Feb. 24.

Disarming the Underworld.

"There are more people in the underworld carrying deadly weapons than in the Army and Navy of the United States," said Attorney-General Cummings last year. As part of the Government's anti-crime efforts his department has sought to disarm the underworld. The last Congress enacted a drastic law providing for control of machine guns. Now, in proposals sent to Congress, Mr. Cummings proposes similar control of small arms. This step was embodied in his program of last year, but was eliminated.

No efforts to disarm the criminal can be complete without control of pistols and revolvers, highly adaptable to lawless purposes because they may be easily concealed. In fact, as Mr. Cummings points out, the United States is the only major nation that permits unlicensed sale of these weapons in most jurisdictions.

The program calls for registration of small arms before they may be carried across State lines; a tax on manufacturers and dealers; a tax of $1 on each transfer of a weapon. Law-abiding citizens could still obtain weapons, and officials would have a powerful instrument for dealing with the underworld. America's shocking homicide rate shows the great need for action. Any step that will help keep murderous weapons out of the underworld's hands is highly desirable.

The Post Impressionist

Minnie-Trilby.

Post Office, Monday.

CURTAIN-CALLS continue for wild-women of the past. Persistent demands are made upon the Column for its promised revelations concerning Minnie Renwood.

"You have told us"—so runs a typical inquiry—"about English wild-women and about the Canadian wild-woman, Eva Tanguay. But, although you have mentioned Minnie Renwood as a native-born U. S. A. wild-woman, you haven't given us her story yet. Why?"

The reason for our reticence was simple:

Our own recollections of the lady in question date from a period of such extreme, not to say remote, youth that they are not reliable. We have looked her up in Mark Sullivan's magnum opus, but found her glaring absence one of that work's few faults.

However, we have now secured some details. We trust they are enough to satisfy the morbid curiosity of our mob.

There is no doubt that Minnie Renwood was American. There is no doubt that she was considered very wild.

Minnie was born in Chicago long enough before the original Chicago World's Fair to be a mighty pretty girls in her teens, when the first White City rose beside Lake Michigan, and when visitors by the million were wonder-struck by its exhibits of horseless carriages and lightning-shocked by its Midway. Her father was a hotel proprietor. Her real family name was Dooner.

"Minnie's O. K.," said the booking agent—oh, yes, they did say "O. K." in those days!—"but Dooner won't do. Stick to Minnie, then spell the Dooner backwards and put a 'w' before the double o."

She did not create a furore—at first. Hers wasn't a bit the story of the traditional prodigy. Here is no headliner taken ill, the obscure newcomer substituted—and world straightway at her flashing feet. Minnie didn't even bring a breach of promise suit against a young Croesus or marry an aged Maecenas.

She danced daintily, better than most vaudeville dancers of her time. She had one dance that she did in furs, with a muff, on roller-skates: it won her pleasant applause, some commendatory criticisms. She was lovely, too. Yet the America of that epoch didn't care for dainty dancing or for any dancer who looked like a phenomenally innocent child.

Nevertheless, Minnie was soon to become a creature for half the country (the masculine half) to flock to see, and for the other half (the feminine) to anathematize. In one night—she rose to the dignity of newspaper display-heads.

She was a star and a peril, a wonder and a warning. Mothers forbade their collegiate-sons to go to see her when she appeared at Boston's "Old Howard," or the—whatever was its New Haven counterpart. Sisters joined in that prohibition. Its violation broke engagements.

She was Marvellous Minnie. And she was That Renwood Woman.

You see, a man named George Louis Pamella Busson Du Maurier had written a novel "Trilby," startled civilization and started a tremendous dispute about morals and feet and what not. A great many people thought "Trilby" a wicked book. A great many more thought it in bad taste because it eulogized a portion of its heroine's anatomy which was not commonly praised, much less revealed, in polite society. Even most of those who lauded the story as a work of art and admired its central figure as a charming creation of fiction would not for a moment have tolerated its controversial contents in real life.

You have to draw a line somewhere, you know.

There are some things that simply aren't done.

Now, Minnie's parents, disapproving of her stage career, were not sending her any money to extend it. Nor was her salary munificent.

Do not judge her too harshly. She was sorely tempted. To that temptation she succumbed.

He got them. The truth got out. It horrified the country.

It was alleged, and believed, that one of these women, a Middle Westerner ycleped Little Egypt, danced there exactly as if she were in the "Streets of Cairo" on the World's Fair Midway. That, however, wasn't the worst. It was alleged, and believed, that another of the women, Minnie Renwood, appeared as Trilby.

She never did it again. So far as we know, she never did anything else that merited rebuke.

But wasn't this sufficient and to spare?

India Bill Involves Politics In England

National Government Falters As Nation Debates Dominion Status Proposal.

By David Wills.
Special Correspondence to The Post.

London.

ENGLAND, the country without a constitution, is busy writing a new one for India, and smashing up her own government in the process. The task is a stupendous one. The area of India (1.5 million square miles) is about half that of the United States, and the population (338,000,000) is one-fifth that of the whole world. One-half of the area and one-quarter of the inhabitants are under the rule of some 600 native princes who acknowledge the King-Emperor as overlord; the rest is divided into the nine provinces of British India. There are 12 main languages and over 200 dialects spoken, while only 15.6 per cent of the males and 2.9 per cent of the females are literate. Religious antagonisms and Hindu castes increase confusion almost to chaos.

The existing constitution which is to be replaced by the one now under discussion in Parliament, was set up by the Act of 1919, and was the one first deliberate step toward responsible parliamentary government for India. In the Provinces certain matters were transferred to the control of elected legislatures, others were reserved for the governor appointed by the crown; in the center power lay with the governor general advised by an elected assembly and an appointed council.

From this constitution there were four main steps to the present bill. In 1930 the Simon commission reported on the workings of the old constitution, recommended complete responsibility of the provincial governments to the elected legislative assemblies, no great change at the center, and a round-table conference before any new act was passed. A federal system was set as the aim for India. The Indian princes decided that if a responsible federal government were really to be set up they would be better in it than out. The round-table conference met in London for three sessions, agreed on the principle of federation, but was unable to agree on the basis of election to the legislatures. The Moslems and the Untouchables wanted guaranteed representation, to which the Hindu Congress Party objected, and the matter had to be settled by an award of the British government. Finally a joint committee of the House of Lords and the House of Commons reviewed the whole matter and upon its report was based the present bill.

THIS bill proposes to make both provincial and federal governments responsible to elected legislatures. About 14 per cent of the total population will be entitled to vote for the provincial assemblies; there will be about five male voters for each female, and approximately 10 per cent of the depressed classes will be enfranchised. The members of the federal assembly will be elected by the provincial assemblies for the provinces and appointed by the princes for the states.

The states will join the federation only if they like the act when passed, and will surrender to the federal government only such powers as they wish; but the federal scheme will not be adopted unless at least half of the states join. Safeguards are provided so that representative government in the provinces may be superseded if its irresponsible use threatens to produce anarchy. And three subjects are in any case reserved for the governor general: Defense, foreign affairs and ecclesiastical matters.

The new constitution is, therefore, a considerable step toward the desired aim—dominion status. In India it has received criticism from all directions, but political agitation in India has for so long preached non-cooperation that no possible constitution could satisfy. The present proposal is a workable scheme which will probably find enough responsible supporters to make it a success for some considerable time.

But at home, the effort of producing the bill and getting it through the House threatens to destroy the national government. The Conservative diehards, led by Winston Churchill, the old buccaneer, hate the bill; they claim that to set up federal government in a politically incompetent country will destroy the Empire; all they are willing to do is grant some increased responsibility to the provinces. Until a few weeks ago Mr. Baldwin was able to keep this opposition in restraint, for if you deny self-government, said he, you lose India for the Empire. He might have added that if you split the Conservative Party you destroy the national government and let in the Socialists.

BUT the die-hards were unable to keep quiet for long. Randolph Churchill, the young buccaneer—young man in a hurry—was put up for Parliament in the by-election held at Wavertree, and all the "Firm-Hand-in-India" men rushed to his support. The election became an open revolt. The official Conservative candidate was backed by the full power of a strong party machine; yet the Labor candidate won, simply because the Conservative vote was split. Out of a total of 44,000 votes the official candidate got only 13,771, compared with 33,000 out of 39,000 at the last election in 1931.

The danger of a split in the Conservative Party is obvious. Yet the party's official position in the government is attacked from both wings. The die-hards complain not only against the India bill; they object to most of Mr. Baldwin's liberal policies, and to association with Mr. MacDonald. The young Conservatives, impatient at the stagnation and apathy of the government, want to jettison MacDonald, adopt Lloyd George, pep up the party platform with his new deal, and go to the country for reelection as a re-formed party. Unfortunately for them, they were rushed into Parliament by the height of the national unity sentiment boom which swept the country in 1931; the Conservatives are bound to lose some seats at the next election, and the young progressives will be the first to go.

Mr. Lloyd George is far too knowing a politician to be snared into the tratp set on the last occasion for MacDonald. His is the most interesting position in the political scene. He has produced the outline of a "get-something-done" scheme which was immediately popular, he has sufficient political funds at his personal disposal to finance a candidate in every constituency if he so wishes, and he is a politician of immense personal prestige.

It is probably true that if the prime minister were elected in England by popular vote, as the President is in the United States, Lloyd George could have had the job any time since the war. Obviously the Conservatives would be tickled to death to get him into their camp, but his terms include the removal of Neville Chamberlain from the treasury, MacDonald from the premiership, and a more certain prospect for his new deal. There is little chance that these terms will be accepted.

• • • •

YET the Conservative-supported national government must do something. It has just made a fearful bungle of the unemployment relief. New regulations for relief payments, produced some weeks ago, were promised to increase total payments by some £3,000,000. But their first application raised a terrific uproar; protests poured in that relief was being cut, and that the government was economizing at the expense of the most wretched members of the community. It's certain that there were many corruptions under the old scheme, and nobody knows whether, in fact, the new regulations would have increased relief payments, for the government got into a panic, abandoned the revisions and ran to cover.

The economic omens for the national government are as inauspicious as the political. They had hoped to introduce a new budget with vote-catching concessions on income tax and, say, beer; but already there is talk of increases rather than reductions of tax, for the Government has pleasantly rioted away its last year's surplus in subsidies. There are rumors also that the attempt to corner the pepper market, which is in process of examination at present, may have involved some pretty scandals; the bursting of the bubble may lead to a major economic setback, and provide ammunition for the Labor party against the national government. These may be merely rumors which will die away when the mess left by the gamblers is cleared up and the names of the gamblers made known, but the general outlook for the year seems to be none too hopeful. The number of unemployed increased by over 200,000 in January and there is a feeling abroad that the peak of the "boomlet" has been reached, and that the most that can be done during the year is hold the present level. With this atmosphere to help it, the national government is beginning to think of a general election in October of this year. And the prospect isn't very much to its liking.

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

Hates to Let Go.

THOSE are right half-hearted statements by Administration forces that they want to let the $5,000,000,000 work bill rest in committee until the country brings pressure to the support of Mr. Roosevelt. There are sufficient grounds for the belief that at heart they don't look for the country to do any such thing and that in the event it should, the Administration forces hope the country will accompany its pressure with an explanation of the bill. They can't comprehend it themselves, and there is a growing belief the Administration knows not much more about it than they.

BARGERON.

For one thing, there is thought among some of them that although the American Federation of Labor's demand for the prevailing wage was impossible, it was justified in its stand.

• • • •

If it was known how the money is to be spent the federation's apprehension that the living standard would be lowered under the $50-a-month wage could be better appraised. In the absence of this knowledge there are only the assurances of Mr. Roosevelt that he won't permit the standard to be lowered. The question arises, now that a breathing spell has come, how he could prevent it.

The question is whether the Government would not come to be the sole or at least the main occupant of every field it chose to enter with its $5,000,000,000, not whether private employers would seek arbitrarily to lower wages. For example, it is planned to spend a large part of the money on rural electrification. It's a cinch no private industry would undertake to compete in this field with the Government paying only $50 a month. That would become the standard wage in the field because the Government would be the only one engaged in it. This would seem to apply similarly in home building. A private contractor would hardly try to build houses with prevailing wage costs against the Government's building them at wages of $50 a month. As a matter of fact, it has been repeatedly stated privately in Administration circles that there is a definite desire to bring the building trades wages down in the belief the workers would profit over the long run with a higher income.

• • • •

The plain truth is the bill has not been thoroughly thought out. Admittedly it would be suicidal and probably the beginning of the end of private industry in this country if the prevailing wage was paid. And there is the serious question whether this end would not eventually result from the Government's operating in private industry at the lower wage level.

All things considered is there any wonder that sentiment for the dole is growing?

It will be interesting under the circumstances to see how far the Administration forces go in attempting to line the country up behind Mr. Roosevelt. They can't possibly have their hearts in the work—they are too uncertain about the bill themselves.

But they aren't likely to admit their error and back-track gracefully. After all, that sounded like a right bold utterance when Mr. Roosevelt stated in his message to Congress it was time to take people off of relief. There ought to be some second thought before these statements are made. They are too hard to swallow.

There is also the NRA dilemma. Always the Administration has denied indignantly the NRA fostered monopoly. There is even a provision in the act saying it can't.

The Administration is getting ready to admit now, however, that it does. Donald Richberg, the coordinator, is paving the way. He's making speeches about the difference between good and bad trusts.

This is the strategy behind letting the new NRA bill originate in Congress. The Administration wants the Congress, without asking it publicly, to approve the "good" trusts. As the strategy runs the Administration will probably express public surprise if Congress does do this, and say, as does Mr. Wallace: "Oh, oh, oh, we wish Congress hadn't done that."

Growing Up

Winchester Finds More Traffic Lights Needed.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 24.—Winchester's lone traffic light, dark throughout the week until the crowd of Saturday night shoppers storm the city, soon will be discarded for a more modern type, if plans of city council mature. Additional lights at intersections in the business section will also be installed.

The traffic problems of the city have been aggravated because some of the principal streets were plotted in colonial times, when Winchester was on the frontier.

At the suggestion of C. W. Hollis, chief of police, the council recently appropriated $1,500 for traffic lights, and E. J. Snapp, chairman of the traffic committee, says a central control system will be in operation by early spring.

Dr. LeFevre Recommended.

Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 24 (Spl.). Dr. Robert G. LeFevre, Chambersburg, has been recommended by the Democratic county committee to succeed Dr. John H. Kinter as medical director of Franklin County, it was learned today. Dr. J. W. Croft, burgess of Waynesboro, had been considered but declined along with Dr. John M. Gelwix, Chambersburg.

Woman Named to Post.

Weston, W. Va., Feb. 24 (Spl.).—Announcement has been made by Representative Jennings Randolph of the appointment of Miss Ann Gillenwater as acting postmaster of Hepzibah to succeed M. Clay Haller.

As Italy Saw It In 1918

Light Reading

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

ROBERT M. BANKS, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, writes me an interesting letter, beginning, "Hurrah for Mrs. Plum and her list of Light Reading!"

He then gives me a list for the benefit of all our family of readers—for everyone who reads my column is a member of the family—which he himself has enjoyed and which books he quite rightly believes would be good "for tired business men or anybody else. Here they are:

"Tembarom," by Frances Hodgson Burnett. She wrote "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and tried in vain to forget it.

"Coniston," by Winston Churchill.

"Mr. Crewe's Career," by Winston Churchill. Mr. Churchill is in excellent health, and stopped writing novels in the full tide of successful production. I wonder why?

"The Treasure of Heaven" by Marie Corelli. Mr. Banks says, "Never mind her others, read this."

"Dawn," by H. Rider Haggard.

"Joan Haste," by H. Rider Haggard. (Also anything else by him.) I shall not forget the excitement over "King Solomon's Mines," or how in "She" (was it?) Umslopagaas held the stair. Wow!

"White Fang," by Jack London.

"The Right of way," by Gilbert Parker.

"The Weavers," by Gilbert Parker.

"Fortune's Fool," by Rafael Sabatini.

"Kennedy Square," by F. Hopkinson Smith. I was afraid Mr. Smith, whom I knew very well was forgotten. I am glad to see his name.

"The Wings of the Morning," by Louis Tracy. This is the most exciting novel I myself have ever read. It is just one thing after another.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," by John Fox, jr.

"Riders of the Purple Sage," by Zane Grey.

"Soldiers of Fortune," by Richard Harding Davis. In a contemporary review it was said, "The heroine did her stunt without a whimper."

"Bella Donna," by Robert Hichens.

"The Turmoil," by Booth Tarkington.

Once when I was sick and had to wait five hours between two trains, I took refuge in a retreat in Indianapolis, read Tarkington's "The Two Vanrevels" and was able to take the next train. I read it through in exactly 5 hours with 15 minutes to see the doctor and another 15 for a frugal meal.

No End of Books

Edward C. Boykin Compiles An "Autobiography" From Washington's Own Writings.

By Theodore Hall.

OF George Washington, Edward C. Boykin says: "No hand in history wrote so patiently as his." A good round assertion, that, and perhaps questionable. Napoleon penned some 50,000 letters, Washington 30,000—to take one comparison. And there were authors of antiquity who make moderns appear to be afflicted with writers' cramp. But the statement does serve to draw attention to the vast body of Washington's letters, journals, Army orders, state papers, messages and addresses which we have.

Out of them, by choosing the passages in which Washington revealed himself personally, Mr. Boykin has constructed "The Autobiography of George Washington" (Reynal & Hitchcock, $2.50). It is an admirable feat of scrapbook technics. Mr. Boykin, a Philadelphia advertising man, comes to the task through his hobby of collecting facsimiles of historic papers—last year he gave us a portfolio of 26 "Famous American Documents and Letters." Now, with abundant clippings from the Washington shelf, with a running gloss of explanatory notes, with a fine array of over 100 portraits and painted scenes and battle maps, he succeeds in taking us back to Washington's time and environment and in allowing us to hear what Washington might very well have said in a hypothetical autobiography.

It is as if we were given two hours at the study table of a specialist in Washington, to read the crucial passages of first-hand material, to gaze at assembled prints and illustrations, and to be, in effect, our own interpreters of a personality and a career.

• • • •

"I HEARD the bullets whistle, and, believe me, there is something charming in the sound," wrote Washington, age 22, to his brother after the first skirmish across the Alleghanies. Later the same year, he "bade farewell to the profession of arms"—this is Mr. Boykin's note—"and retired to Mount Vernon."

We are going to see that expectation of peace time and again, always circumvented. For the very next year he went over the mountains again and behaved valorously in the defeat of Braddock's men. "I had 4 Bullets through my Coat, and two Horses shot under me, and yet escaped unhurt," he wrote back. Command of the Virginia frontier patrol kept him active for the next three years, and then with the fall of Fort Duquesne he retired once again. Married to the Widow Custis, he could write from Mount Vernon: "I am now I believe fixed at this Seat with an agreeable Consort for Life and hope to find more happiness in retirement than I ever experienc'd amidst a wide and bustling World."

True, that happy plantation life lasted him 16 years—rearing his two stepchildren, enjoying fox hunts, dinners, balls and local politics, and especially relishing the care of the estate. "I think with you," he wrote a friend, "that the life of the husbandman is the most delectable. It is honorable, it is amusing, and, with judicious management, it is profitable." But on a May morning in 1775 he set out for the Second Continental Congress in Philadelphia. Not for six years was he to cross the threshold of Mount Vernon again.

And hear Washington's expectation, once more, after the warring was over and he had come back to the Potomac in 1784: "I have not only retired from all public employments, but I am retiring within myself • • • I will move gently down the stream of life, until I sleep with my fathers." But five years later he had the Presidency on his shoulders, and it was to be eight years more before he could say: "I am again seated under my vine and fig tree."

IN spite of the efforts of historians who have gone somewhat out of their way to "humanize" Washington, it may still be a general impression that underneath his calm decorum lay a cold, glassy, always-assured steadiness of mind. Mr. Boykin gives us passages which correct that.

Here is his frank disgust with the ill-organized Continental Army after he took command in Cambridge: "Such a dirty mercenary spirit pervades the whole that I should not be surprised at any disaster that may happen. • • • Could I have foreseen what I have, and am likely to experience, no consideration upon earth should have induced me to accept this command."

Even worse was his despair after the retreat from Long Island: "Such is my situation that if I were to wish the bitterest curse on an enemy on this side of the grave, I should put him in my stead with my feelings; and yet I do not know what plan of conduct to pursue. I see the impossibility of serving with reputation, or doing any essential service to the cause by continuing in command, and yet I am told that if I quit the command inevitable ruin will follow from the distraction that will ensue. In confidence I tell yo that I was never in such an unhappy, divided state since I was born."

But one must keep, while reading such confession, the pertinacity of Washington just as clearly in view. It is that combination—here, in Dr. Freeman's "Lee," in any good biography—which gives the chronicle of a life one of its few enduring values.

FOR the atmosphere of another age may be enthralling, the high points of a great career exciting and the trivia entertaining, but you will have only the pleasant and evanescent emotions unless you are somehow enabled to set up a bridge, however long and narrow, from yourself to the hero of the bigraphy. Not three readers out of a hundred are long affected by anything else but that personal relevancy. And as for the rest, not being students of revolutionary campaigns or of early politics, why should they apologize?

Looked at thus, Washington's picture of himself (via Mr. Boykin) may remain somewhat remote and Olympian. If there is struggle in these writings, it is Titanic struggle. The warmth is generalized, not intimate—a matter owing no doubt to fashion and place. Only once will the reader come near a smile. "For my own part," wrote Washington to a young relative, "I never did, nor do I believe I ever shall, give advice to a woman who is setting out on a matrimonial voyage; first, because I could never advise one to marry, without her own consent; and secondly, because I know it is to no purpose to advise her to refrain, when she has obtained it."

The Once-Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Mr. Wilentz in Florida.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz, prosecutor in the Hauptmann trial, is vacationing in Florida. They say that as the train neared Miami he pointed his finger at the conductor and demanded, "What time do we get in? Answer yes or no!"

• • • •

But the most disconcerting moment on the trip from New Jersey to Florida came, it is rumored, when the porter, under the impression that Mr. Wilentz might be intending to sleep in the upper, asked, innocently enough, "Do you want a ladder?"

• • • •

Mr. Wilentz was received in Miami with almost as much publicity and acclaim as the President of the United States or a fresh shipment of female swimming champions. He was mobbed at the depot and when he reached his hotel at Miami Beach it was hours before the swimming pool bathing beauties could recapture their audience.

• • • •

At last reports, Mr. Wilentz was still having great difficulty adjusting himself to the new environment, and the following dialogue was reported between him and a beach guards

Guard—Do you wish a beach chair?

Mr. Wilentz—What is the purpose of that inquiry?

Guard (a little puzzled)—The sun is very hot today and . . .

Mr. Wilentz—Never mind about the sun; we'll come to that later.

Guard—Would you care for a beach umbrella?

Mr. Wilentz—If your honor, please, that question is inadmissible at this point.

Guard (very befuddled)—I merely thought . . .

Mr. Wilentz—Never mind what you thought. Just state what you saw.

Guard (groggily)—What who saw?

Mr. Wilentz—Don't cross-examine me; I'm asking the questions around here. Now then, answer the question.

Guard—What question?

Mr. Wilentz—Where were you on the night of June twenty-third? And listen!

Guard—What?

Mr. Wilentz—No alibis!

The NRA is to be extended two years, thus giving it the longest wake in history.

Abyssinian Incidents More Than Flare-Ups

Maps, Treaties And Past History Indicate Rich Kingdom Has Long Courted Conquest.

By Lothrop Stoddard.
Special Correspondence to The Post.

THE precise outcome of the existing crisis between Italy and Abyssinia is as yet undisclosed. Despite Mussolini's mobilization orders and other warlike gestures, he has not yet really shown his hand. Attempts to forecast the Duce's intentions are, therefore, at best more or less clever speculation on a very complex politico-military problem involving not merely northeast Africa but the European situation as well.

One thing, however, seems clear: the present fracas is no mere boundary dispute which has flared up owing to chance local happenings. On the contrary, it represents one phase of a state of tension that has existed for many years and bears all the earmarks of a consistent line of Italian policy. Therefore, even though current disputes are somehow compromised, the underlying tension will remain, and Italo-Abyssinian relations will presumably continue to be a potential source of trouble from which a fresh crisis may arise at any time.

For half a century, Italy has had her eye on Abyssinia, or Ethiopia, as it is officially known. It was the lure of that rich inland country which impelled Italy to occupy its original colonies of Eritrea and Somaliland, which in themselves are almost worthless strips of desert seacoast. A rash attempt to conquer Abyssinia soon ended in crushing defeat which compelled Italy to recognize the sovereign independence of the Ethiopian Empire. Nevertheless, Italian aspirations, though adjourned, were not forgotten. The secret treaties negotiated in 1915 between England, France and Italy seemed to envisage possible Italian gains at Abyssinia's expense.

An exchange of diplomatic notes between England and Italy in 1925 define respective spheres of interest in Abyssinia. Most significant of all, the recent agreement between France and Italy greatly strengthens the latter's position in northeast Africa and practically assures Italy of France's benevolent neutrality in whatever may transpire. Italy thus appears to have laid a solid diplomatic foundation for what is politely termed a "forward" policy toward Abyssinia.

• • • •

THAT such is the character of her intentions seems clear from other evidence, some of it of long standing. A study of the official maps of northeast Africa issued by the Italian government yields some interesting facts. Consider first the map published in 1918 and reproduced in all its main features on this page today. That map shows a tentative boundary line between Abyssinia and Italian Somaliland, drawn in conformity with the terms of the Italo-Abyssinian Treaty of 1908, whereof article 4 states explicitly: "All the territory of Ogaden and all the territory of the tribes on the Ogaden side shall remain an Abyssinian dependency." The Ogaden is the semidesert region today in dispute and, according to this map, the places where recent fighting has occurred, shown in the reproduction, are fully 60 miles inside the Abyssinian border. Incidentally, it may be remarked that the latest official British map of northeast Africa (1934) duplicates exactly the Italian map of 1918. There certainly has been no treaty change in the situation.

Nevertheless, subsequent Italian maps show strange alterations, which might almost be termed "expansion by cartography." An official map of the 1920s claims a sizeable jog of territory just south of the border of British Somaliland, but still draws a provisional frontier line. The most recent Italian map, of 1934, suppresses any sign of even a tentative frontier in the Ogaden region, which thus appears as a sort of open noman's land.

Perhaps the most extraordinary bit of mapmaking to date is one prepared for use in the Italian press after the armed clash at Ualual last December. Herein the battleground is lifted arbitrarily from its former location and is set down far to the northeast, close to the British Somaliland border. The obvious effect is to make the Italian public think that the Abyssinians had committed a flagrant assault upon a lawfully posted Italian garrison.

• • • •

SO much for the maps. Now a few words concerning the clashes themselves. As luck would have it, an Anglo-Abyssinian boundary commission happened to be in the Ogaden region, allocating the local wells to pastoral tribes which, though under either Abyssinian or British protection, were all entitled to use those wells by treaty regulations. It should be noted that the British acknowledge Abyssinian ownership of the whole Ogaden region. It should likewise be noted that, nearly two years previous, the authorities in British Somaliland had been informed that Italian forces were encroaching upon the region, but had paid no attention to the fact nor in any way acknowledged the validity of their presence.

It was toward the end of last November that the Anglo-Abyssinian boundary commission, with its escort of Abyssinian soldiers, approached the wells of Ualual, only to find the oasis occupied by a force of Italian colonial troops, Somali natives commanded by an Italian officer, one Capt. Cimmaruta. Then ensued the dramatic incidents formally attested by both the British and Abyssinian commissioners, and subsequently embodied in a document published by the League of Nations.

According to these official reports, Capt. Cimmaruta acted throughout in most provocative fashion, taking the attitude that the commissioners were trespassers on Italian soil and threatening them with violence on more than one occasion. Colonel Clifford, the British commissioner, characterizes the actions of the Italian commandant in most uncomplimentary terms, concluding: "The British mission made every effort to arrive at an equitable solution, but was constantly thwarted by the Italian officer's unconciliatory and disobliging attitude, which may be judged from a remark several times repeated: 'Take it or leave it.'"

• • • •

THE climax to this acrimonious controversy came with the sudden appearance of two Italian airplanes which began zooming low over British headquarters, threatening the British officers with trained machine-guns. At that, Col. Clifford evidently told Capt. Cimmaruta just what he thought of the proceedings. The Italian left in a rage, and things looked so serious that the British commissioners, in order to avoid a grave international incident, withdrew to the town of Ado, some 20 miles away. Part of the Abyssinian escort, however, remained facing the Italians at Ualual, and this deadlock ended in the fight of December 5, wherein it appears that over 100 Abyssinians and some 30 Italian colonials were killed, with many wounded on both sides.

Since no neutral observers were present at the battle, we have only the diametrically conflicting assertions of the contending parties, each of whom accuses the other of unprovoked attack. It is this battle of Ualual, together with some other minor incidents, which Mussolini refuses to arbitrate or have laid before the league, and for which he demands from the Abyssinian government a formal apology and an indemnity of over $4,000,000.

Offhand, this looks rather like a modern version of the fable of the wolf and the lamb. It certainly would be if Abyssinia were a civilized nation-state. Unfortunately for itself and for the world's peace, Abyssinia is the last survival of an old-fashioned Oriental empire. Now history abundantly proves that such polities sooner or later become grave nuisances to their civilized neighbors. Only while the throne is occupied by a strong ruler do law and order prevail. In weaker hands, government quickly degenerates into partial or utter confusion, and the country becomes a focus of disorder which spills over the frontiers.

• • • •

THAT is what has happened in Abyssinia. When the Italians made their first invasion some 40 years ago, an iron-handed monarch named Menelik had just solidified the country, and he kept his grip until his death in 1913. Then a period of confusion ensued. The present Emperor, Haile Selassie, though well-meaning and seemingly intelligent, is obviously no second Menelik. The result is that the central government is not master of the situation.

The Ethiopian Empire consists of a mountainous nucleus, the home of the true Abyssinians, and a fringe of lowlands inhabited by alien Somali or Negro tribes. The Abyssinians themselves are split into clans headed by chiefs who are usually semi-independent. As for the outlying tribes, only a monarch like Menelik can keep them in order. Today they are quite out of hand, as was tragically shown the other day when a nomadic horde burst over the border into French Somaliland and massacred an entire French detachment which tried to bar their way. This is only one of many instances that have sorely tried the patience of all adjacent colonial authorities—British and French as well as Italian.

That the Ethiopian Empire is an irresistible, semibarbaric power, a menace to its neighbors and addicted both to slave-holding and to slave-raiding, is stressed by the Italians as justifying their present strong-arm policy. Such a country as Abyssinia, they assert, can not be deemed a full-fledged member of the league or even of the comity of nations, unless it fulfills its international duties; therefore, Abyssinia can not justly claim the rights due a civilized nation-state. The Corriere della Sera recently expressed the Italian viewpoint when it wrote: "Even if we admit that the Abyssinian authorities were in ignorance of incidents which appear like provocations, one must ask how a country whose government can not maintain discipline among its own soldiers can be put on the same footing as civilized nations. The presence of Abyssinia in the league is altogether strange."

Such are the two sides of a controversy which may soon develop into a major crisis with diplomatic, military and international consequences of the most far-reaching character. Meanwhile, Italy mobilizes, troopships sail for Africa, and the rainy season, hindering large-scale military operations should be over by May.

College Editors Advised on Code

Maurice B. Pasch Speaks to Virginia Gathering.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 24.—Editors of college newspapers were advised by Maurice B. Pasch, NRA representative from Washington, not to be "whipped under the graphic arts code without a chance to find out on what grounds compliance is required."

Pasch made his assertion in a speech before the Virginia Intercollegiate Press Association in its winter business session here last night.

A compliance fee had been demanded of members of the association, Alexander Hudgins, executive secretary, explained, and "Mr. Pasch was invited to give the Government's angle on the problem."

Borah Assails 'Good' and 'Bad' Trust Divisions

May as Well Distinguish Between Kidnapers, Says Idaho Senator.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, yesterday warned Donald Richberg and the Administration against any attempt to differentiate between "good" trusts and "bad" trusts in extending NRA.

"You may just as well talk about good kidnapers and bad kidnapers," said Borah, who months ago asserted NRA was fostering monopoly.

The Idaho Senator referred specifically to the speech at Miami Friday night by Richberg, director of the National Emergency Council, in which the Administration's principal adviser on NRA argued for a measure flexible enough to allow a distinction between kinds of trusts.

In his statement, Senator Borah said the argument in favor of such a flexible law reminded him of a "recent argument of a noted lawyer making the best effort possible to steer between extortion and kidnaping."

Cites Peril of Favoritism.

"Bad trusts and good trusts incorporated into law would simply mean that monopolies were to be permitted to prey upon the people by leave of political favoritism," he said.

The statement of the Idahoan, came at a time when congressional committees were about to start consideration of new NRA legislation.

President Roosevelt in his message to Congress said the new law extending NRA for two years should be drawn to discourage monopolies.

Borah drew some comfort from this, but he did not like Richberg's declaration that adequate measures to bring about cooperation within or between trades and industry were made virtually impossible by the sweeping prohibitions of the antitrust laws.

Breakdown Feared.

"This refinement about a law which would seek to make a distinction as to what monopoly should be in order to be classed good and what it may not do in order to be classed as bad is a round-about way to break down and render wholly ineffective all laws against monopoly and all efforts designed to protect the people from monopoly," Borah insisted.

Borah remembered him yesterday.

"Gen. Johnson was and is in favor of trusts," he said. "He said so. There is no pretense about Gen. Johnson. He thought the time for the small man to go had arrived. He declared frankly that practically every code is in restraint of trade.

"And that, in my opinion, is what is sterilizing to a large degree the stupendous effort of the Government to restore prosperity."

must pay the Government debts, and stockholders, who must pay the corporation debts. Many of these individuals, it was pointed out, are farmers. Higher prices, it was declared, are likely to increase rather than lessen the burden of debts.

"The creditor classes include individuals, business concerns and institutions owning bonds, mortgages and notes," the statement said. "Funds of the life insurance companies are invested in bonds and mortgages. These companies have held nearly one-fourth of all outstanding urban mortgages. The banking institutions have invested deposits of the citizens in bonds and mortgages. The building and loan associations are large mortgage holders. The endowed universities, hospitals, libraries and welfare foundations have extensive investments in bonds and mortgages.

Balanced Budget Urged.

"As the value of the dollar becomes less through inflation, there is a decline in the value of all savings deposits, life insurance policies, annuities and endowments. The cheaper dollar may help one relatively small group of debtors, but all creditor classes are injured."

As another argument against inflation, the league pointed to the inevitable rise in prices of necessities with a lowering of the value of the dollar.

"Assume that ten loaves of bread cost $1 in the Unietd States," the league said. "In the Civil War greenback experience the cost would have mounted to $2.85. Under depreciations similar to the French postwar inflation, the earlier French assignats and the Russian and German postwar inflation, the cost $1 in the United States," the ten dollars, two hundred eighty-eight dollars, fifty billion dollars and one trillion dollars."

Following this line of argument, the league urged that the experience of other nations be used as a yardstick in measuring what might happen in the United States.

"In the light of sound monetary policies supported by the evidence offered in history, the Congress should pledge its best efforts toward a balanced budget and against measures which might lead to ruinous inflation of currency or credit," the statement continued.

"Advocates of legislative proposals for inflation have sought to find justification in the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States in the gold clause cases. The impetus thus given to agitation for extreme monetary measures emphasizes the need for caution. While the court upheld the exercise by the Congress of broad powers under its constitutional authority to coin money and regulate the value thereof, the decision offers no warrant or excuse for resort to schemes heretofore proved dangerous and unwise."

No Fears Felt Of Court's View On New Oil Law

Federal Attorneys, After Study, Say Section Will Pass Test.

By the Associated Press.

A word by word scrutiny of the new oil law yesterday had convinced Government attorneys that it will stand the test which sent its predecessor to the discard.

The Supreme Court ruled that the previous act, section 9(c) of NIIRA, was invalid because Congress delegated too much authority to the President.

The court said:

"There are limits of delegation which there is no constitutional authority to transcend. * * * As to the transportation of oil production in excess of State permission, the Congress has declared no policy, has established no standard, has laid down no rule."

This referred to the section which said:

"The President is authorized to prohibit the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of petroleum and the products thereof produced or withdrawn from storage in excess——"

But in the new law Congress has purposely slighted the President. It reads:

"The shipment or transportation in interstate commerce from any State of contraband oil produced in such State is hereby prohibited."

Administration attorneys said this assured the constitutionality of the new law. In the parley between the House and Senate over the new bill, which finally was approved in conference, the House wanted to amend this section and the Senate refused.

Later the conference group admitted in part the House contention giving the President the authority to lift regulations under certain conditions, but placed this in a separate section. And the law provides it is not invalidated if the compromised section later is held void.

Secretary Ickes has announced he would attempt to bolster the law which President Roosevelt signed Saturday by legislation to give the Government power to regulate production in the States.

Unless the new statute fails to accomplish its purpose of checking the shipment of hot oil, congressional observers said there was little likelihood for a measure of the type Ickes wants in the immediate future.

The proposal was made at the last session of Congress and considerable opposition developed. Events since have not disspated it.

Former Bodyguard Of Capone Dies

Frankie Rio Succumbs to Heart Disease.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 24.—Death today had cut once again into the dwindling ranks of Chicago gangdom's "old guard," but the familiar swan song of whining bullets was strangely missing.

Frankie Rio, one-time trusted lieutenant and bodyguard of Al Capone, was the latest addition to the grim roll—a victim of heart disease which brought death yesterday while he slept in his suburban Oak Park home.

Secrecy shrouded all details and for a time attracted police attention until officials, satisfied death was from a natural cause, abandoned their investigation and permitted his widow and friends to proceed with plans for a quiet funeral.

Frankie, known to police as Capone's "heavy man," was linked to 14 underworld murders during his career as a racketeer, but in no case were police able to secure enough evidence to bring him to trial.

County Offices Too Cramped, Citizens Claim

Federation Backs Drive for New Building in Prince Georges.

A movement to provide county officials with office space, and the police force with additional facilities was launched in Prince Georges County yesterday with the backing of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

The federation proposal contemplates erection of a county building either on the site of the old Bladensburg jail or on the so-called Rogers property in Hyattsville, construction to be financed by a PWA loan.

The building would provide, under present plans, offices for the county sanitary commission, the park and planning commission, the county building inspector and the State road office, in addition to quartering a portion of the police department.

Proponents of the plan have charged that the present police court and police headquarters building in Hyattsville is inadequate and ill-suited for police use, lacking sufficient office space and cell blocks for prisoners.

In addition, they point out, $5,000 is now being paid annually for the Hyattsville building, plus $3,500 for office space fro the sanitary commission in Washington.

The building proposal follows a report of the county grand jury last year which criticized officials for office rental costs.

Sandstorm in Desert Delays Plane Repair

Los Angeles, Feb. 24 (AP).—A stinging wind that drove desert sand in the faces of mechanics working at Muroc Dray Lake to repair the famed airplane, Winnie Mae, today threatened to delay attempts of Wiley Post to start again on a substratosphere flight across the continent. Post is eager to start for New York this week in an effort to set a record of well under 10 hours at an altitude of 25,000 feet or more.

British Pilot Quits After Girls' Suicide

Parents of 2 in Death Leap Fail to View Bodies.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 24.—James Kirton, pilot of the Hillman Airways plane from which two American girls plunged to their deaths Thursday, resigned today.

The airline said the pilot's resignation had no relation to the tragedy, since Kirton had submitted it a month ago to take a post on an Australian line, and praised his ability.

Coert Du Bois, United States consul general at Naples, Italy, and Mrs. Du Bois, parents of the girls, Jane and Betty, visited police court at Romford, near where the plunges took place.

They did not visit the mortuary in Horn Church where the bodies of the girls are lying.

An inquest will be held at Romford tomorrow by Coroner O. Edgar Lewis with a jury. It was believed two letters left by the sisters would not be read in public and it was considered unlikely that Du Bois would testify.

Friends said the girls were despondent because their sweethearts in the British air force were killed in a plane crash recently.

Citizens Request Semiannual Tax

Payment in Installments Urged to Swell Total.

Payment of county and State taxes in semiannual installments has been recommended by the Greater Bladensburg (Md.) District Citizens Association. It was believed the number of delinquent taxpayers would be reduced, thereby increasing tax receipts and lowering the burden of the annual levy.

The association voted in favor of the proposed bill to make the State automobile license year start on April 1 instead of on January 1 as at present.

Letters were ordered sent to State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, of Prince Georges County, president of the Maryland Senate, and Delegate Egbert F. Tingley, of Prince Georges County, a member of the House education committee, stating that the association is opposed to any reduction in the Governor's budget for education, State or county.

Approval was given the requests of County School Superintendent Nicholas Orem for school buildings under the PWA program. These recommendations include an auditorium and eight additional rooms at the Bladensburg High School and four additional rooms at the Bladensburg Elementary School.

Court to Hear Coblentz Plea On Indictment

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Feb. 24.—A plea contending that an indictment charging Emory L. Coblentz, former head of the closed Central Trust Co., of Frederick, with making fraudulent corporate representations, is faulty will be heard here tomorrow.

Leo Weinberg, of Frederick, the former banker's attorney, holds the indictment, drawn up in Howard County, is faulty because Coblentz has been tried on a charge of fraud in Frederick County and that in two civil cases it was decided he did not commit fraud.

Three other Howard County indictments charge Coblentz with making false pretenses in two cases and of conspiring with three other officers of the defunct bank.

Only the indictment charging fraudulent corporate representations will be considered tomorrow.

In May, 1934, Judge George A. Soler, who will hear the plea tomorrow, and Judge Eli Frank sustained a plea attacking the indictment. The court of appeals, however, acting upon an appeal by the State prosecutors, overruled the lower court and sent the case back for trial.

Cut in School Funds Due to Poor Attendance

Front Royal, Va., Feb. 24 (Spl.).—The State appropriation for the Rappahannock County schools has been cut so as to permit only an 8-month school term this year, Prof. Milton Hollingsworth of the Washington (Va.) High School set forth in a statement yesterday.

The cut is due to low percentage of attendance, which reflected epidemics of measles, scarlet fever and influenza. Hollingsworth stated he believes lack of interest on the part of parents also is a factor in the poor attendance. He urged cooperation in having all children attend regularly.

Virginian Burned in Fire Started by Gasoline.

Winchester, Feb. 24 (Spl.).—T. J. Dale, of this city, probably will not start another fire with gasoline. An attempt to do so resulted in burns about his hands, damage to his kitchen, and an early call for the volunteer firemen who tumbled out of beds at 2:30 a. m. yesterday to answer the call.

Dale, who runs a sewing machine repair shop, found it necessary to kindle the fire in his kitchen and dipped the wood into a pan of gasoline before igniting.

His injuries, slight, were treated by the firemen.

THE UNITED GAS IMPROVEMENT COMPANY

Recovery Pace Is Maintained During Week

Trade Advances Exceed Declines for a Fortnight.

With few exceptions, the recovery movement which set in during the latter part of last week continued this week and, with the announcements of the Supreme Court's decision upholding the Government's gold policies, commodity moved sharply upward as trading volume assumed larger proportions. For the second successive week, advances exceeded declines in the weekly compilation of wholesale prices, prepared by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. Advances this week totaled 40, as compared with 33 in the preceding period and 40 in the corresponding week of 1934. Declines numbered 31, against 14 last week and 27 in the same week of last year.

Cash Markets Gain.

In the cash markets, continued gains in foods and foodstuffs were instrumental in lifting the Dun & Bradstreet daily commodity index to 124.27, which establishes a new high point for the recovery movement. The latest index compares with 121.53 at the beginning of this year, and shows a rise of 14.5 per cent over the 108.53 figure at this time last year.

Foodstuffs were quick to feel the impetus of the gold decision and the group, as a whole, again showed advances in excess of declines, the former totaling 21 this week and the latter 12, while in the previous report these were 17 and 11, respectively. Coffee was one of the exceptions to the general rise. Despite a favorable world statistical position the futures market for the staple has just ended the seventh successive week of declines. Spot prices also suffered a loss of from 5c to 6c in the past week.

Failures Mark Sharpest Drop For This Year

Reduction in Defaults Was Mainly in East, Report Says.

Quite a drop in the number of business failures in the United States occurred in the past week. The number of such defaults in the week ended last Thursday, February 14, according to the records of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was 233, against 263 and 268, respectively, in the two preceding weeks.

For the same week last year, there were 239 failures, and the decline in that week was from 291 and 305 in the two preceding weeks. In both years, the number for the latest week was the lowest for any week for the year to date, the increase in such movement at the opening of the new year having expended its force by the middle of February.

The reduction in the number of defaults for the latest week this year was mainly in the East. There was a smaller decline in the West and for the Pacific Coast States, but in the South defaults were more numerous than in the preceding week. Defaults with liabilities of $5,000 and over in each instance numbered 139 for the latest week, against 160 such failures in the previous week and 156 a year ago.

Heavy Rains Cut Argentine Wheat

Yield Will Be Lower Than Estimates.

Wheat yields of the 1935 Argentine harvest, now practically completed, are considerably below expectations of a month ago, according to a report to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics from Agricultural Attache P. O. Nyhus, in Buenos Aires. The damage to the crop, due to excessive rains, was experienced mainly in the southern half of the wheat belt, where fully 10 per cent of the Argentine wheat acreage is located.

The new crop is unofficially estimated at from 220,000,000 to 230,000,000 bushels. The first official estimate issued on December 20, 1934, placed the 1935 crop at 252,000,000 bushels, compared with 286,000,000 bushels in 1934 and an average of 222,000,000 bushels for the five years ending with the 1934 crop. In view of the deterioration which has occurred in the yield and quality of the crop the next official estimate will probably represent a significant reduction from the first forecast, says Nyhus.

Food Prices Fall Slightly for Week

The Dun & Bradstreet Weekly Food Index declined slightly to $2.75 for the period ended February 19, from the peak of $2.76 the week before. Although price advances exceeded declines by 15 to 6, sharp recessions in a few high-priced commodities were responsible for the lower index. Excluding last week, the latest figure continues at the highest level since September, 1930, and shows a gain of 28.5 per cent over the same week of last year, when the index stood at $2.14.

Higher prices were recorded this week for flour, wheat, corn, rye, oats, barley, bellies, lard, sugar, cottonseed oil, cocoa, beans, steers, hogs and sheep, while the list of declines included butter, eggs, coffee, potatoes, raisins and lambs.

S. E. C. Repeals Rule.

The Securities and Exchange Commission today repealed Rule 11-B, which required exchanges to obtain and keep available for public inspection copies of all documents filed with the commission under sections 12, 13 and 16 of the securities exchange act concerning securities in their unlisted trading departments.

Business Reports Continue to Show Diverse Trend; Pessimism Grows

By Ralph Robey.

Business reports were more unfavorable in the aggregate last week than at any time during the past four months. Washington developments, too, with one or two exceptions, were not encouraging from the point of view of further immediate recovery. During the week, therefore, there was a rapid growth in pessimism about the future. This was especially true in the case of stock exchange traders, with the result that security prices declined on Saturday to below the figure for a week earlier, in spite of the intervening sharp rise on the Supreme Court decision on the gold cases.

Even the sum total of such bad news, nevertheless, has not convinced the more careful analysts of business conditions that we necessarily have seen the peak of the recent upward trend. Or perhaps it would be more accurate to say that they do not believe that there is any sharp drop immediately ahead. Rather, it appears to be their opinion that at worst there will be nothing more than a leveling out of business activity for some few weeks, while at best all of the indices may work to higher levels.

This is their view, it should be emphasized, for only the immediate future. They still believe that there will be a substantial downward adjustment during the spring and summer. It merely is a question of when it will start. The consensus places its beginning, as stated here previously, toward the latter part of March or during the first half of April. For obvious reasons the analysts refuse to be more definite than this in their timing. Likewise, and for equally obvious reasons, they refuse to estimate just how low indices will fall.

Carloadings Decline Last Week and Last Year.

Among the business indices the worst record was in freight car loadings. For the week ended February 16 the total was 581,981. This was a drop of 10,579, or 1.8 per cent, from the preceding week and of 18,287, or 3 per cent, from the volume of a year ago.

Of more significance that these total figures is the fact that the decline was general, there being only two of the eight classes into which car loadings are divided showing an advance. These two divisions were forest products and miscellaneous. In the latter case the increase over a week earlier was 7,578 cars. Such a gain ordinarily is viewed as highly favorable because of the blanket character of this division. It is taken to mean an improvement in the rapidity with which goods as a whole are moving to the markets and hence to consumers.

In the present instance, nevertheless, such a favorable interpretation has to be accepted with some reservations. This is because there was a sharp decline—4,454 cars—in the volume of merchandise of less than carload lots. This indicates that the increase in miscellaneous freight was the result, at least to some extent, of special factors and can not be taken as a clear-cut reflection of improvement in the general merchandising field.

These considerations apply only to the figures for the week. If one examines the figures from a longer point of view it still is possible to find much encouragement in them. Thus when allowance is made for "normal" seasonal variations it is found that the present level is close to the highest point reached since the bottom of the depression. That peake was in March of last year. The present figure is only about 5 per cent below it and is some 7 or 8 per cent above the low of last November.

New York Drags Bank Clearings Below Last Year.

Bank clearings, another blanket index of general business activity that is widely followed, also fell below the figure for last year but rose above the preceding week. In the 22 cities regularly reporting these data the total for the week ending February 20 was $5,258,000,000 as compared with $5,305,000,000 a year ago. This is a decline of a little under 1 per cent. As compared with the preceding week the gain was $1,016,637,000. In the same week last year the gain over the preceding week was $1,147,851,000. The large gain in both cases is the result of the difference in the number of business days in the two weeks, the earlier week in each year including Lincoln's Birthday.

Here again, however, it is not sufficient to deal merely in totals, and here, in contrast to the case of carloadings, when one makes a necessary correction, it is found that the more detailed study gives a favorable result. This necessary correction is the elimination of clearings in New York City from the total. This is essential because of the large influence speculative trading has on the New York City figures.

When this is done the figures show a handsome increase—14.7 per cent—over the corresponding period in the preceding year. The greatest increase—38.1 per cent—was in Detroit and is largely accounted for by the fact that automobile production currently is about 30 per cent above last year. Other cities showing exceptionally large gains in the volume of bank clearings over last year are Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, and Portland. The only declines were in the South—Baltimore, Richmond, Atlanta and New Orleans.

Production of Electric Power Shows Only Slight Change.

A third of the blanket indices, electric power production, in the latest figures available shows a slight decline over the preceding week but a good increase over a year earlier. Specifically, production in the week ending February 16 was 3,000,000 kilowatt hours less than in the week ending February 9. As compared with the same period in 1934, the increase was 7.3 per cent, against an improvement of 6.8 per cent a week earlier. In view of the recent variations in this index, neither of these changes in the current figures is significant.

Among the more specialized indices an irregular trend is indicated. Steel production last week, for example, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute, was at the rate of 49.1 per cent of capacity. This compares with 50.8 per cent for the week of February 11 and with 52.8 per cent for the week of February 4. This latter figure, 52.8, marks the peak of a climb extending without interruption for 16 weeks. The current drop, therefore, especially in view of its small magnitude, is no cause for concern.

Automobile production, which is primarily responsible for this upward climb of steel, remains the brightest spot in the business picture. It shows improvement week by week. For the week ending February 16 the estimated output was 82,119 cars, as compared with 78,453 in the preceding week and with 63,794 in the corresponding week of 1934

Washington Developments On Balance Were Unfavorable.

Other business indices indicate this same spotty trend. If one takes them in the aggregate he finds that the volume of activity is continuing at a resonably high level. At the same time he finds little, if any, evidence to support the view that the trend for the next few months will be upward. If he is to be optimistic, therefore, he must look to other factors.

During last week these other factors on balance were unfavorable. The Supreme Court decision on the gold cases, while saving immediate difficulty, did not necessarily settle the issue involved in so far as Government bond holders are concerned. The defeat of the Administration in the Senate on the works bill assures further delay in getting this program under way and the possibility that the final measure may be even worse than that sent to Congress by the White House. The speech of Mr. Jesse Jones in New York Thursday evening on the attitude of the Government toward continuing to help the railroads seemed to indicate that several bankruptcies in this field might be expected in coming months. And the continuing attacks on the public utilities meant further deflation in this part of our economic structure.

Offsetting these unfavorable developments, and it came only at the end of the week, was the court action against the Government on TVA. This, however, was far from sufficient to change the general atmosphere. The week ended, therefore, with more widespread gloom than has been the case for several months.

ROBEY'S REVIEW

Bank Clearings Up in Week, but Under Last Year

Total of 22 Leading Cities in United States Was $5,256,048,000.

Bank clearings for the week approached closely the year's high established in January. The total for the 22 leading cities in the United States for the week ended Wednesday, February 20, as reported by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was $5,256,048,000, against $5,305,101,000 for the corresponding week of 1934, a reduction this year of 0.9 per cent. This contrasted with a gain of 2.0 per cent in the previous week. At New York City, clearings were $3,455,459,000, a loss of 7.5 per cent from the amount reported last year, while the aggregate for centers outside of New York of $1,800,589,000 was 14.7 per cent higher.

The increase was mainly at some of the leading outside centers. The total for the latter was in excess of any week this year, even above that for the first week of January, when yearly settlements swell bank clearings to a considerable amount. Only five cities outside of New York reported smaller clearings than last year, whereas last week there were seven. The aggregate the past week was in excess of that for the preceding week by $1,016,637,000, whereas a year ago there was an increase of $1,147,851,000 for the same two weeks. The notable gains the past week were at Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Louisville, Kansas City, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle.

Wheat and Corn Exports Less From U. S., Canada

Exports of wheat (including flour as wheat) from United States and Canadian ports, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., for the weekended February 16, 1935, totaled 1,872,675 bushels, as compared with 2,035,497 bushels in the previous week and 3,622,380 bushels in the corresponding week of last year. For the season, July 1 to date, wheat exports aggregated 99,842,502 bushels, as against 134,739,420 bushels for the same period a year ago.

Corn exports for this week were 1,000 bushels, compared with 2,000 bushels in the preceding week and 15,000 bushels last year. For the season, corn exports totaled 21,000 bushels, as against 399,000 bushels for the like period in the previous year.

In addition to the public offering, the notes are offered in exchange to holders of the compan's 10-year collateral trust gold notes which mature on April 1, 1935.

Holders of the maturing notes will receive a premium in cash of 1 per cent, or $10 per $1,000 upon making the exchange. No other adjustments of interest will be made as both the notes to be accepted in exchange and the notes to be issued carry semiannual interest coupons payable April 1, 1935.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

AND now radio has its ten commandments.

According to a United Press story last week from Los Angeles, M. H. Aylesworth, N. B. C. president, set forth his "ten cardinal principles," which he believes will hold broadcasting to a high degree of public service. He says the task of radio is to "insure the highest degree of public usefulness, with full freedom of expression in all matters affecting the American people, without censorship or tax to the listener."

Roughly, his principles include: Freedom of speech, full information and discussion of matters of public importance, availability of time without cost to religious organizations, right of free speech and time facilities to the President, Cabinet members and Congress, and free speech to private citizens on subjects of great public importance.

Supplementing the "freedom of speech" resolutions is a commandment which gives the speaker "the right to continue his speech without interruption throughout the allotted time unless he or she violates the law of the land," and another which allows him or her to speak without censorship.

The others listed are concerned with the coordination of radio facilities in wartime, an understanding with sponsors of entertainments that they step aside, within notice, for all events of world importance, and worldwide intercourse through international broadcasting in Government affairs and other major events.

Mr. Aylesworth declared he was pleased to say that the present Administration has "in no way influenced or coerced, by demand or gesture, favors from the radio broadcasting business," and that "radio's greatest virtue is its cleanliness."

His list of best speakers is illuminating. The President, Huey Long, Father Coughlin, Al Smith, Will Rogers, Owen D. Young, William Randolph Hearst, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Dr. Walter Damrosch and Dr. Glenn Frank are included.

Finally, here's Mr. Aylesworth's opinion of the American system of radio broadcasting: "It has been the most successful in the entire world."

IN the morning mail comes a letter from Mrs. Leona Clark Palmer, 515 Clarendon avenue. She says:

"At the present time it is my privilege to be president of a radio club in honor of Anthony Frome, Poet Prince of N. B. C. This club has just been organized, and has about 100 members—charter members. It will continue to grow. The interest manifested in this work has been most gratifying. * * * We are known as 'The Anthony Frome Fellowship—Court of the Poet Prince.'"

Electric Bond Makes Protest On Utility Bill

Fears Loss by Millions who Have Invested in Securities.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 24.—Electric Bond & Share Co. presented tonight additional arguments to arouse stockholders in the general battle of utilities against passage of the holding company and Federal power bill now before Congress.

In a letter to stockholders signed by G. E. Groesbeck, chairman, and S. R. Inch, president, it was declared the proposed legislation for regulation of holding companies is "grossly unfair and unjust" and, if enacted into law, may "render valueless the investment of millions of security holders who invested their savings in public utility securities."

"As to your own company," the letter stated, "we believe it has been a constructive force in the upbuilding of a great industry.

"It has made mistakes, but who has not? It is and has been guiltless of any intentional wrongdoing. It has nothing to fear from, but rather would welcome, just and fair regulation of its operations and business."

The letter pointed out that in addition to the proposed strict regulation of utility holding companies, the pending legislation would impair the functions of operating companies.

Industry Rises, Trade Declines

January saw a lull in wholesale and retail trade but manufacture and industry showed more than seasonal activity. Snow cover was widespread in areas where moisture was lacking.

Contra-seasonal gains included particularly iron, steel, automobiles, farm implements, electrical equipment, glass, rubber goods, most textiles, furniture and shoes. Electric power continued its steady rise. Coal output equaled 1931. Lumber output lessened but shipments increased. Carloading dropped slightly and bank clearings were larger. The Dun & Bradstreet Weekly Food Index in January was at its highest since November, 1930. Failures continue fewer than a year ago.

Tobacco Trading To Begin Today

N. Y. Produce Exchange to Handle Futures.

New York, Feb. 24 (AP).—Trading in tobacco futures will be opened tomorrow on the New York Produce Exchange.

The first delivery month will be May in contracts for Burley and flue-cured tobacco. Each contract consists of 10,000 pounds of unstemmed, steam-dried or sweated tobacco of uniform grade and type, of one crop year, the output of one packer, and pasked in hogsheads of size and weight commercially used for the type of tobacco tendered.

Price changes will be in one one-hundredth of a cent, the fraction amounting to $1 a contract. Changes are to be limited to 3 cents a pound a day. Trading in tobacco was inaugurated on the New York Tobacco Exchange, but the market was suspended recently.

Tax Publicity Repeal Asked

Body Protests Against Making Private Affairs Public.

An appeal for immediate repeal of the publicity section of the present revenue law has been made by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Business organizations throughout the country will receive immediately a report of the chamber's Federal finance committee pointing out the unfairness of the publicity section.

"The purpose of the income-tax returns," the committee declares, "is to enable the Government to obtain necessary revenue, and should not be a design for publishing private affairs to the world. No departure from this principle is justifiable.

"The information to be made public will disclose business and private affairs to competitors and will be used improperly in connection with securing credit ratings, locating prospects for selling campaigns of all sorts, for satisfying mere personal curiosity and for racketeering. Publicity will encourage crime, as the data will be a prolific source of information for those plotting kidnaping or other crimes."

Stocks Falter As Traders Try To See Future

Spring Is Regarded as Critical Period in Business Cycle.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 24.—Wall Street approaches the vernal equinox—normally regarded as likely to mark the seasonal peak of industrial activity—feverishly trying to calculate the probable extent of recovery.

The passing of an important economic milestone last week in the Supreme Court's gold decision has oriented financial and business attention to the immediate problems of the spring months.

What a number of analysts regard as an intermediate cycle has been on the upswing since last September. Whether it will reach its top sometime in March or April, as the seasonal business swing usually does, or whether it will merge with a strong major upward cycle that will carry on through much of the year, remains to be seen.

Important business indicators of the past week, such as steel output and freight movement, showed some recession, suggesting to the pessimistically inclined that the intermediate cycle starting last autumn may already be rounding out its top, but this was not the general view. It was pointed out that the uncertainties surrounding the gold decision had had a paralyzing effect the past few weeks. And one of the basic industries—steel—had encountered a new influence in code regulations, which have deferred placing of second quarter business.

Walt Mason, Himself

Trouble.

"I HAVE so much trouble," said Benjamin Bubble, "I'm badly discouraged, I see no relief; my hens have quit laying, my ganders are straying, and life is a burden, there's nothing but grief. It's hard to be joking when chimneys are smoking, it's hard to be cheerful when beds fall apart; my rooftree is leaking, door hinges are squeaking and all of these troubles are rending my heart. In springtime the chickens are raising the dickens with all of the seeds I have sown in the ground; there's no use in spraying the trees, they're decaying, my horse has the glanders, my cow's in the pound. The bookworms are feeding on books I'd be reading, but now they are riddled and raveled and torn; I've garb in the closet, the moth comes and chaws it, and all I can do is to sit here and mourn. My wife has hay fever, the trouble won't leave her, and so she is sprinkling the house with her tears; my home is headquarters for troubles and fears. Existence is mordant, all things are discordant, the tail seldom goes in this life, with the hide; we're always invested with things we've detested, the things that we long for are always denied." But men say he's crazy; "Old Ben is so lazy, and things would be right if he'd just do his chores; forever he's sitting while glad hours are flitting, and filling the air with his wails and his roars."

Her long lace veil, extending down the train, was an heirloom, having been worn by her great-grandmother. She carried an ivory-bound prayerbook with markers of white satin and lilies of the valley.

The bride's half sisters, Ruth Winsor Robb and Cornelia Robb, were flower girls and J. Hampden Robb, jr., and Bayard Van Rensselaer Robb were pages.

William Rotch Wister, of Philadelphia and New York, brother-in-law of Mr. Mitchell, was best man. Ushers were Clayton F. Banks, jr., Henry A. Thouron, Richard Benson, all of Philadelphia; G. Miss Thornton Becomes Bride Of T. T. Corbin Ceremony Takes Place in Christ Church, at Rockville.

Word has been received of the marriage of Miss Louise Beatrice Thornton and Mr. Tazewell Tayloe Corbin, of Fredericksburg, Va., which took place February 18 at high noon at Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, Rockville, Md., when the Rev. Arthur B. Rudd officiated in the presence of relatives and a few close friends.

The bride, who is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Tayloe Thornton, of Port Royal, Va., was given in marriage by her sister, Mrs. Charles Lorraine Ruffin, jr., of Fredericksburg. The bride wore a smart spring suit of dark blue, and a lighter blue blouse, and with this she wore a corsage of sweetheart roses and lilies of the valley. She carried an old English prayer book, which her mother had used, following an old English tradition through her grandparents family, Capt. and Mrs. Lambert Disney, of London, England.

Mrs. Ruffin wore a smart ensemble of tourquoise blue and hat to match. Mrs. Leland S. Conness, cousin of the bride, wore an attractive outfit in a new spring shade of brown and accessories to match. Mr. James Parke Corbin was best man for his brother.

Mr. Corbin is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Champe Carter Corbin, of Corbin, Va., and grandson of the late Mr. James Parke Corbin, of Moss Neck, Caroline County, Va., whose handsome estate is one of the lovely Colonial homes in the State. The bride has spent her life at Belle Grove, one of the loveliest Colonial homes on the banks of the Rappahannock, in King George County, which was owned by her father. A part of the estate was once owned by the Conways. The mother of James Madison, eleventh President of the United States, was a Miss Conway, and her home there, which is now known as Port Conway, was where he was born.

The new James Madison Bridge crosses at the Rappahannock at Port Conway and Port Royal, Va. Because of illness in the bridegroom's family the wedding was very quiet.

Wedding Performed Saturday in St. Jerome's Church, Hyattsville.

One of the most interesting weddings of the season in Southern Maryland took place Saturday morning when Miss Ruth Wilma Pritchett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilby Pritchett, of Bishop's Head on the Eastern Shore, was married to Mr. John Kelly Keane, son of Mrs. Martin P. Keane, of 11 Jackson avenue, Riverdale, Md., at 10 o'clock in St. Jerome's Catholic Church, Hyattsville.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Andrew J. Carey, pastor of St. Jerome's Church; the Rev. Chester J. Czyc, assistant pastor of St. Jerome's Church, and the Rev. Francis Lucey, S. J., regent of Georgetown University Law School.

An attractive setting for the ceremony was provided by an arrangement of tulips, snapdragons, pink roses, carnations and palms. Miss Honor Keane, sister of the bridegroom, and organist and choir director of St. Jerome's Church, played the wedding marches. There were solos by Mrs. Edith Wheatley, Mrs. Angelo Dondero and Mrs. Naomi Sheehy.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. J. Wilby Pritchett, jr., of Forest Glen, Md., was attired in a navy blue ensemble, with a corsage of gardenias. Her only attendant was Mrs. J. Wilby Pritchett, jr., who was in an oxford grey ensemble with a corsage of talisman roses.

Dr. Martin J. Keane, of Riverdale, brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and Mr. Ignatius J. Keane, another brother, was the only usher.

First Hint of Spring Weather Finds Capital Society on Parade

Yesterday's warm weather, reminding one of early spring in Washington, brought many members of Capital society out for brisk walks, as every one who has spent a winter in Washington knows that those balmy days in the middle of February only last a short time, and must be used to good advantage.

Miss Margaret McMullen, pretty daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John R. McMullen, was photographed with her mother walking down Connecticut avenue, the former wearing a mink coat over a bright blue wool dress, with one of the new off-the-face felt hats in a matching shade of blue with a gray and blue scarf. Mrs. McMullen wore a back caracul coat and black hat to match, trimmed with a rhinestone clip. Her dress was of black flat crepe, and with this she wore black suede gloves.

Mme. Riano, wife of the former Ambassador of Spain, was glimpsed with Mrs. M. A. Hutner. Mme. Riano wore a smart black cloth coat trimmed with a large collar of black fox, and her toque was of Persian lamb. Her pumps and gloves were of black suede. Mrs. Hutner wore a black top coat with a silver fox scarf, and her black velvet hat was trimmed with a small jeweled ornament. With this she wore black calf oxfords and white gloves.

Mrs. Charles Tilgham, wife of Col. Tilgham, U. S. A., took advantage of the fine weather to walk her guest Mrs. Maurice Halpan, of Long Island, around Washington and show her the sights. Mrs. Tilgham wore a very dark brown coat with a shawl collar of mink, over a dress of brown flat crepe, and a smart brown hat. Her purse was of brown fabric and her gloves of brown kid. Mrs. Halpan wore a black cloth coat with a cape of caracul, and a black caracul hat with a nose veil. Her walking oxfords were of black suede, and her antelope purse was of black. Her gloves were white.

Miss Isabelle Gilman, of Ontario, Canada, was out walking with her hostess, Miss Mary Elizabeth Tilgham, one of the attractive debutantes of the season. Miss Gilman wore a black cloth coat trimmed with a silver fox collar. Her shoes were of black patent leather and black fabric. Her black leather purse had a smart monogram in silver. Miss Tilgham wore a black cloth suit with the scarf and pocket trimmed with Persian lamb. The coat was of fingertip length, fastened only at the throat. With this she carried a black purse of material. She wore black suede oxfords, a smart felt hat and black novelty gloves.

Mrs. Bingham And Aids Visit Stratford Hall

Wife of Envoy Confers on Furnishings for Lee Shrine.

Mrs. Robert Worth Bingham, wife of Ambassador Bingham, passed yesterday at Stratford Hall, Westmoreland County, Va., en route to New York, where she and Mr. Bingham will sail for England March 1. At Stratford Mrs. Bingham met the members of her committee which has in charge the furnishing of this national shrine under the auspices of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation. They were Mrs. Wilson Norfleet Felder and Mrs. William H. Fain, of Greenwich, Conn.; Mrs. Egbert Jones, of Mississippi; Mrs. Thomas Floyd Smith, of Louisville, Ky., and Mrs. Cazenove Lee, of Washington, D. C.

Others present were Mrs. Charles D. Lanier, of Greenwich, Conn., president of the Lee Foundation; Mrs. Harry B. Hawes, wife of former United States Senator Hawes, and Mrs. Charles E. Bolling, of Richmond, Va. The group were luncheon guests of General and Mrs. B. F. Cheatham at Stratford.

As 1935 is the dedication year of this historic Virginia plantation, which was the birthplace of Robert E. Lee and his kinsmen, the two Lee signers of the Declaration of Independence, Mrs. Bingham is eager to take immediate steps for the furnishing of the ancient mansion. She is doing much of the research work personally in England as well as in this country. She is basing every detail of the furnishings on authentic records and documentary evidence. Through a special contribution received from the United Daughters of the Confederacy funds were provided for the restoration and furnishing of the historic birth chamber in the east wing of the mansion. Mrs. Bingham also is planning to furnish the great hall this year, restoration of which has just been completed by means of a special gift from a citizen of North Carolina.

Mrs. Breckinridge Long, wife of the United States Ambassador to Italy, also is an active member of the housefurnishings committee of the Lee Foundation and during her recent stay in Washington spent considerable time at Stratford Hall in a study of the situation there. Mrs. Long, like Mrs. Bingham, is an authority on the eighteenth century period of furnishings and interior decorations.

New Eye Kits Lend Sparkle, Boost Charm

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HAVE you ever thought that no woman is really homely who has lovely eyes? And no woman really lovely unless her eyes are beautiful? And yet, do you know, that a recent survey by a beauty institute revealed that women give less care to their eyes than any other feature? They will spend small fortunes during the year to improve their skin, or their hair. They will be equally lavish with lipsticks, and exceed their budget bounds buying powders and rouges that flatter. But they know little of the wonderful eye treatments that are available for small cost and which insure the beauty of the eyes.

New Kit Offered.

One cosmetician who is particularly painstaking about her products, who spends much time in research for preparations, has within the last week released a small eye kit which contains four things.

There is a special eye lotion which brings quick relief when the eyes are tired and aching. And yet it is so gentle and soothing in its action it can be used as often as necessary. Some eyedrops are wonderfully helpful in relieving inflammation of eyes or lids caused by strain. An effective restorative for removing lines, wrinkles and crow's feet is an eye cream which you pat on your upper and lower eyelids until it is absorbed by the skin. Last, but not least, is an eyelash cream which promotes the growth of lashes and makes them lustrous and silky.

These preparations, bought singly, would cost you $6.50, but the kit containing trial sizes of them all is only $1.

Wooden Buttons Return.

It will be easy to knock on wood this spring, for, according to style dispatches, dresses, coats, suits and sweaters are going to be bountifully and smartly trimmed in wooden buttons, clips, pins and slides. If you are doing your own dressmaking, or at least you own designing, here's a tip about your wooden trimmings. Buy them at a certain local shop and they're yours for a very special price. Belt buckles, large and small, buttons to match in any size, are only 10 cents a card. The majority of these are in natural colored wood, but there are some which are attractively stained.

New Modeling Wax.

Modeling is made clean and easy and more fun than ever with some new pliable wax.

At first it's a hard cube, but it melts at body temperature, so that, even while you hold it in your hand it becomes soft and pliable enough to model. When it cools off it returns to its original state.

Children simply adore it. The wax is so light that the little boats, ducks or fish they model float readily. It lends itself to hundreds of ideas, because of the 32 lovely colors in which it comes.

One rhymster was so inspired by it that he penned these lines:

People and flowers and fruits—
Things you cak make of most every kind,

Bargain in Soap.

Bathe with a pure and delicately scented soap in soft water scented with lilac after you've bought the bargain bath package featured in a downtown store.

It includes three cakes of soap which lathers easily and leaves the skin refreshed and glowing, and also a package of lavendermeal, which scents the water—and softens it, too.

Parker Models Arrive.

At last they are here, four of Gladys Parker's brand new models, designed as usual for the "smart young thing." If you are young and want to be smart, you won't consider your spring wardrobe complete without at least one Parker model.

Those which are on display in a certain downtown store are given fascinating names such as "Gingham Girl," "Sissy," "Apple Mary," and, believe it or not, "Leap Frog." And they all go to prove that anything from a gingham knock-around frock to a bright silk print can be equally irresistible.

The entire set costs only $1 and is sure to please even the most fastidious bather.

Glove Bracelet.

One way to make your gloves doubly smart is to top them off with a lastex bracelet. It's a new idea, and one of the best. For even with a plain gauntlet glove you can give it a dressy look, or double its chic by wearing a latex bracelet over the wrist. These bracelets come in colors to match your glove and they fasten with a small metal (silver or gold) monogram.

What with a monogram on your bag and one to match on your gloves you can't help being identified as a smartly clad young person.

Gleanings from Current Verse

This Is My Country.

THIS IS MY COUNTRY, bitter as the sea.
Pungent with fir and bayberry.
An island meadow, stonewalled and lost,
With August cranberries touched red by frost.
Two hours of sun before the fog erases
The walls on walls of trees trimmed sharp as laces.
A house behind the last hill of them all,
And after that the lonesome seagulls' call;
A juniper upon a windy ledge,
Splendor of granite on the world's bright edge,
A heron on the beach and one on wing,
Wind wrapped round each last and living thing,
And all the trees like strings upon a harp.

These are my people, saving of emotion,
With their eyes dipped in the winter ocean,
The lonely, patient ones, whose speech comes slow,
Whose bodies always lean toward the blow,
The enduring and the clean, the tough and clear,
Who live where winter is the word for year
And the briar rose had best be brief,
Where most trees have a dagger for a leaf.
These people are my kindrd and my kind,
They have a kind of lighthouse for a mind,
Keeping lit inside because the sun
Is too low to be a trusted one—
The cheerful, crystal people who have had
The chance to know the taste of being sad.

Chance Encounter.

"I AM A TRANSIENT . . ."
Within his eyes
Strange tides were shadowed on a stranger shore:
I heard the sea gulls and their secret cries,
I heard the closing of a distant door.
And down the slope of some far distant hill
I was the hunted with a heart of lead:
I was the quarry, panting, hurt and still,
My life untangling in a crimson thread . . .

Imperial Riding School.

THE TIME HAS GONE when one may speak of honour
Without a penalty, if only silence,
And I protest I speak of no such matter,
But we are here, and we must speak of something,
And, as I said, it happened in Vienna.
You know the riding school where Francis Joseph
Maintained a box to show his decorations.
Well, he was dead the day we paid two shillings.
The gallery was empty as the future,
The only hoof-marks in the dirt-arena
Said anything of horses or their riders.
"We're late," I thought, and then a high-pitched whinny
Cried "We are lost," and then a slattern groomsman
Led in by strap, red leather thick embroidered,
A great white horse, like milk, like snow, like foam,
Like the first flower on my hill at home,
And in the pure, the dark, the furious eyes
I saw a virtue long abated rise.

Thorn Trees.

TALL HONEY LOCUST trees that in the spring
Wore crowns of fragrant flowers, yellow-white,
And lacy scarves of green, stand bare tonight
Stript of all beauty; every single thing
That made them lovely. Only thorns still cling
Tenaciously. Leaves, in the autumn bright
As minted gold, lie dead . . . and brown pods smite
The frozen earth with blows that dully ring.

When time has dropped white snowflakes on my hair
And gently etched faint lines upon my face;
When winter strips youth of its shining dress
Devoid of beauty, this shall be my prayer:
Grant that no thorns will cling to mar the grace
Of sunset days or pierce their gentleness.

New Ice.

CLEAR, CRYSTAL-SHARP, it rims the pond,
Encircling the blue depths beyond
With strange and fragile mimickings
Of summer's gentle growing things;
Of serried grasses, line on line,
Enmeshed with tender leaf and vine,
And ferny sprays, all fronded grace,
And starry flowers, thin as lace.

Another night of bitter chill
Upon these waters dark and still—
Then grass and ferns and stars will be
Welded in one transparency.

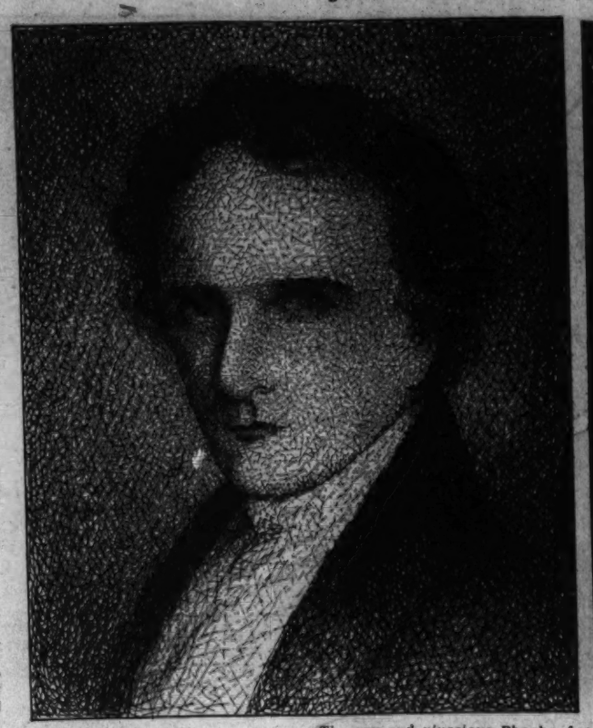
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

James Rush—Phoebe Ann Ridgway.



The gay and vivacious Phoebe Ann Ridgway, after her marriage to Dr. James Rush, became the leader of Philadelphia society in the early nineteenth century and conducted that city's first salon. Following her death her husband established the Ridgway Library as a memorial to her.

Mrs. Rush Observed the Custom of Observing Days at Home.

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

EARLY nineteenth century days in the United States were as replete with romance as the colonial and post-Revolutionary era. After the Revolution, a distinct type of American society began to develop in the leading cities. Washington, Baltimore, Richmond, Charleston, Philadelphia, New York and Boston carried on much the same sort of contest for social leadership that is apparent today.

When the Capital was removed to the Quaker City from New York, a fitting setting was found in the life there for national activities. Philadelphia was the scene of substantial old homes and established families and its social round was elaborate despite the Quaker tradition.

In December of 1799 Phoebe Ann Ridgway, daughter of Jacob Ridgway, was born in London. An artist of the period has preserved her appearance in a portrait made of her with her sister, Susan, while living in Antwerp, where her father was then United States Consul.

Gazing at Phoebe Ann in her charming white muslin frock, with tiny red shoes peeping out from the skirt, one finds forecast of the popularity she was to assume later in Philadelphia, where her spacious drawing rooms formed the first salon in that city.

Dr. Rush Traveled Widely.

James Rush, a young doctor, son of Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, was a student as well as physician and traveled widely and became expert in the study of the voice which was his hobby. He left for posterity an interesting set of note books and diaries on his travels. He was a collector of rare books and paintings, and the Rush home in Philadelphia was a treasure trove of Colonial and post-Colonial prizes along these lines.

Phoebe Ann Ridgway received all the advantages of education available for women at the time. Her parents being possessed of ample means she early acquired a taste for society, the gayer side of life, beauty, music, light and color as well as a decided taste for letters. Meantime her own personality won all hearts. From her girlhood days her hand was sought in marriage by the most eligible of suitors, some even of noble birth. But Phoebe Ann shook her head laughingly. "Only an American could win her," she would assert.

One day her beau ideal American was presented to her. He told her glowing tales of his travels, and spoke to her of Philadelphia and the delights of life there. The foreign suitors realized then that their pursuit was of no avail. So they withdrew and it was soon apparent that a good understanding existed between Phoebe Ann and Dr. Rush. They were married and after a tour of the continent were established at the stately Rush home in the most fashionable part of Philadelphia at that time.

Introduced Innovations.

Mrs. Rush introduced some social innovations such as having regular days at home and not being being accessible to callers at all hours of the day as had been the charming but rather trying custom of Philadelphians. After a time Mrs. Rush gained weight although she did not lose her beauty and she started walking as a fad. She took her own constitutional daily with the utmost punctuality. The promenade became a social custom and the Philadelphia matrons found it a great aid in watching their weight.

Their Home In Philadelphia Was Scene of Fetes for Notables.

Mrs. Rush in time became Philadelphia's grande dame. They took a new home on Chestnut street and entertained American and visiting notables. Joseph Bonaparte often was a guest of Dr. and Mrs. Rush. Harriet Martineau was their guest during her American visit. Mrs. Rush's guest list read like a social register of the time.

A social mystery never solved was that of the disappearance of Mrs. Rush's magnificent collection of diamonds after a ball she gave in January, 1857. The festivities had kept up to a late hour and Mrs. Rush had been a gorgeous figure in crimson velvet trimmed with white lace, her neck and arms blazing with jewels. Next morning when she arose her jewel case had vanished.

That summer Dr. and Mrs. Rush went to Saratoga. They were enjoying the gay life when Mrs. Rush died suddenly. After her death Dr. Rush lived the life of a recluse until he died.

He closed the house with the exception of two or three rooms and lived a solitary life, attended, it is said, by a single, faithful servant. Friends tried to arouse him from the depth of his gloom. But in vain. The only relief he found from his grief was arranging the books and pictures which both had loved. When he died, it was learned that he had left much of his fortune to found a memorial library for Mrs. Rush in Philadelphia. It was called the Ridgway Library and long has been a mecca for students of rare books and manuscripts.

Strictly Speaking

What About These.

1. Are anxious and eager synonyms?

2. In "The Raven" what does Poe mean by the line, "Is there, is there balm in Gilead?"

Check Here.

1. Anxious is synonymous with eager when used in the sense of being "earnestly desirous." In any other sense, however, anxious conveys the idea of mental disquietude.

2. The reference is to a question in the Bible, "Is there no balm in Gilead?" Gilead, a mountainous region in Palestine, was noted for its balm. Poe probably meant "Is there nothing to soothe or heal?" (The use of Gilead is, of course, figurative.)

Mother of Another 16-Year-Old Would Like to Communicate with 'N. L. D.'

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I missed the letter in your column Saturday, February 16, written by the boy who signed himself "Lost," but would like to have seen it because I have a boy of 16 whose father is dead.

* * * *

My son has also stopped school and nothing I can do or say will convince that he should go back to school. He would have finished first year high school last June if he had continued his studies, as I felt he should.

* * * *

I would like to get in touch with the lady who signed herself N. L. D., to see if she can help my boy and myself, as I am at my wits' end and don't know what to do. He just doesn't seem to take an interest in anything or want to do anything. Hoping to hear from you soon,

Sincerely, R. V. D.

DEAR R. V. D.: I shall be glad to give you the name of the woman who wrote me last week, signing herself "N. L. D.", and expressing a desire to help "Lost" with his problem, providing she gives me permission to do so. In her letter, however, she said: "I do not want my name mentioned except to 'Lost' and his parents." I am printing your request with the thought that she may read it and grant your wish. M. H.

Requires Personal Reply.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: My problem is not of the type one speaks of in public print, and yet it greatly concerns all that I am and do . . . Please tell me what to do, but don't tell me it's imagination, for I know it isn't. Gratefully,

WHAT-SHALL-I-DO?

DEAR WHAT-SHALL-I-DO: Since your problem is one which does not lend itself to candid discussion in an open letter, I suggest you send me a stamped self addressed envelope for reply. In order to identify yourself, re-state your problem at least in part.

M. H.

What Today Means

"Pisces."

IF FEBRUARY 25 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 3:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

On this date it may be through your handshake that someone will form a favorable or unfavorable opinion as to your general characteristics. A firm, but not rough hand grip, inspires far more confidence than a weak or overly strenuous one does, for the latter is likely to irritate.

Business should be very encouraging and some of your expectations realized. There is danger that confidential conversations may be overheard, so it is advisable to exercise discretion in selecting the place you do your talking. Married and engaged couples, as well as those expecting to take the first step toward matrimony, will display wisdom if they display a feeling of generosity in both big as well as little personal matters on February 25.

If a woman, and February 25 is your birthday, you have a fearless spirit, and one that may tempt you to indulge in some rash adventure, to which if you are wise you will not yield. If you will remember "discretion is the better part of valor" you will keep out of hot water. Your mentality is well balanced, and you should have a great deal of executive ability, which can be used advantageously in either office or home. You should enjoy a great deal of popularity.

You are likely to be able to have a great deal more influence over the masculine than your own sex. Office detail work, or department management, as well as writing, offer you an excellent opportunity to display your ability. Your greatest happiness may come through a husband, home and family.

If a man, and February 25 is your natal day, exploration in laboratory work, or far afield, should fascinate you. Chemistry, the sea, air or land travel, journalism, as well as law, are excellent channels through which to gain an enviable reputation.

Painted Nails Of Secretaries Under Fire

DOES A SECRETARY with red finger nails lower the tone of a business office?

This question is being debated by New York stenographers and their bosses as a result of a reputed order of William H. Allen, secretary of the Municipal Civil Service Commission that women employes tone down their makeup, especially their finger nail polish.

Mr. Allen denies that he forbade makeup in his offices, but says he suggested that the young women in direct contact with him as secretaries avoid what he calls "grotesque lips and nails."

His objection to excessive makeup, Mr. Allen said, was based on esthetic grounds. He pointed out also that such makeup created a bad impression with the public.

"The public's impression of an office," he said, "is influenced by the appearance of its staff. The Civil Service Commission is a standard-making body, which has a peculiar relation to the people at large. We need to be able to give evidence of culture, refinement and tone. If some one came into my office and saw me dictating to a stenographer with red nails he'd always associate that sort of thing with me and the Civil Service Commission. It's not a new issue. Schools and colleges are facing the same problem."

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

What Are Bacteria?

BACTERIA are extremely tiny living things, much too small to be seen with the naked eye. Our knowledge of bacteria really dates from the time of Pasteur, although a Dutchman, Leeuwenhoek, with his primitive microscope, first saw living animalcula moving about in water. These were not bacteria, but comparatively large forms of animal life. Pasteur showed that bacteria cause putrefaction in meat broth, and that they are responsible for the foul odors of decomposing foods.

There are thousands of species of bacteria, but only three general forms: spheres called cocci, rods called bacilli, and spirals called spirilla. The spheres may be relatively large or small, and they may group themselves in pairs, in clumps, or in long chains like strings of beads. The rods may be slender or thick, and certain types have blunt or rounded ends; some of them are capable of motion, as they are provided with hairlike projections (cilia) attached to the ends or sides that act as propellers.

Bacteria are really plants and they grow luxuriantly in most body secretions. The mouth, the intestinal tract, and the mucous membrane of the nose contain tens of thousands, perhaps millions of these tiny plants. Most bacteria grow best at body temperature. They must have moisture and most of them require oxygen, although there are a few that can not grow in the presence of the free oxygen of the air. Bright sunlight stops their growth.

Coconut Cans Should Stock Every Kitchen

Housewife Finds No End to Uses of Tropical Product; Adds to Sundaes.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THERE is no end of prattle about what should be included in the stock of a well-supplied pantry shelf. Whatever you do, don't forget to chalk off a permanent spot for a box or two of coconut. If you have never gone adventuring into the realm of coconut cookery, you may wonder why coconut should deserve a special berth on your pantry shelf. You do know, however, what a bit of coconut can do to enhance a custard pie or a plain white cake.

Almost any dessert treated with a sprinkling of this delicate white meat will emerge with twice its original appeal. If you don't believe it, try adding a cup of coconut to your apple betty next time.

Sundaes Tasty.

Did you ever hear of coconut sundaes? They have twice the attraction of any topped with nuts, and here are three that you may try to prove it. First, let's take the coconut strawberry sundae, because everyone's appetite is hankering for the first fruit of spring just now. Place a ball of vanilla ice cream in a glass sherbet cup, cover it with crushed, sweetened strawberries and top it off generously with moist shredded coconut, garnished with one perfect berry. This should be the favorite dessert for the spring season.

Next is the coconut snowball sundae, and because it combines three favorite flavors should appeal to the whole family. Pour chocolate sauce in shallow sherbet glasses, covering the bottom. Shape vanilla ice cream into balls and roll in moist coconut and place one ball in each sherbet glass. One cup of sauce, one-half cup of coconut and one pint of ice cream will make six servings.

Butterscotch sundaes have a popular following, but they will jump to the top of the list when served under the guise of a toasted coconut sundae. Here is the way to do it. Place toasted coconut ice cream, made by the recipe below, in sherbet glasses. Serve with hot or cold butterscotch sauce and top with coconut which has been toasted to a golden brown in the oven. Vanilla ice cream may be used instead of the toasted coconut ice cream.

Toasted Coconut Ice Cream.

1 tablespoon flour.
¼ teaspoon salt.
2 cups of milk.
1 egg, slightly beaten.
1 cup cream.
1 tablespoon vanilla.
1 cup of coconut, toasted.

Combine sugar, flour and salt in top of a double boiler; add milk and egg, mixing thoroughly. Place over rapidly boiling water and cook 5 minutes, stirring constantly. Cool. Add cream and vanilla. Freeze using 8 parts of ice to one part of salt or freeze in trays of a mechanical refrigerator. When frozen to a mush add coconut. Continue freezing until firm. If made in a freezer with a dasher, remove dasher when frozen and repack in 4 parts ice to 1 part salt. Makes about 1¼ quarts of ice cream.

If winter fresh fruits or canned ones are losing their appeal at your table, try the coconut remedy, and see if it won't bring them back into favor. Ambrosia (layers of fruit, powdered sugar and coconut) is the name usually applied to the coconut fruit dessert. Bananas (with a bit of lemon juice added), oranges, grapefruit, dates, figs or prunes as well as canned peaches, pears or pineapple may be served the ambrosia way.

Try the following suggested dinner menu that ends with an ambrosia dessert, and see if your family doesn't approve of the fruit and coconut combination.

Suggested Dinner Menu.

Unsweetened pineapple juice
Broiled hamburg patties with onion rings
Potatoes au gratin
Buttered string beans Cole slaw
Bread and butter
Orange and grapefruit ambrosia
Coffee Milk (for children)

Orange and Grapefruit Ambrosia.

2 large oranges, sectioned and free from membrane
1 large grapefruit, sectioned and free from membrane
½ cup powdered sugar
1 cup moist coconut

Arrange layer of orange and grapefruit sections in serving dish and sprinkle with powdered sugar and coconut. Repeat until all the ingredients are used, topping with the coconut. Chill thoroughly before serving. Serve six.

Relief Plans Of Gov. Kump To Face Test

With Liquor Bill Out of Way, Legislators Take Up Taxes.

Extra Session in Spring Likely in West Virginia.

By Robert H. Horner,
A Special Correspondent.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 24.—The West Virginia Legislature tomorrow will begin the last two weeks of its 1935 regular 60-day session, with most of the major administration measures, excepting the liquor bill, still ahead of it.

The liquor bill, which sets up a State monopoly of sales of all beverages containing more than 5 per cent of alcohol by weight, was passed by both houses and made ready for Gov. H. G. Kump's signature on Friday, after two of its main features had been changed by conferees.

As finally enacted, the bill, instead of providing for a one-man commission to control the system of State-owned liquor stores as proposed by the governor, contains a provision for a three-man commission, at salaries of $6,000 a year each. Gov. Kump is expected to act at once in appointing the commission, as the prohibition repeal amendment becomes operative March 1, and it is desired to begin operation of as many stores as possible by that date, though it is regarded as doubtful if sales can begin under a month.

Petition Clause Included.

Another feature included in the final bill is the clause requiring signatures of 25 per cent of the qualified voters in any county to a a petition before the right of local option may be exercised. This was a disappointment to Senators and Delegates from the so-called dry counties, who had demanded that only 15 per cent of the voters' signatures be required.

Among the men being prominently mentioned as likely appointees to the liquor control commission are Dr. Gory Hogg, of Lewisburg; D. H. Stephenson, former Kanawha County sheriff, and Roy Bird Cook, of Charleston. The board is to be bi-partisan, and the Governor will name one Republican on it.

With liquor out of the way, the legislators now feel that they may proceed with the administration's revenue and other bills that must be passed before adjournment, although it is regarded as likely that an extra session must be called for late spring or early summer to enact laws to conform with Federal legislation relative to relief, PWA, old-age pensions, unemployment insurance and other social reform measures.

Already the Governor has asked the Legislature for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for relief, to be spent at a rate of not more than $250,000 a month for the remainder of this fiscal year, which ends June 30. The lawmakers are expected this week to work on that bill, and also upon the Governor's bills proposing the retention of the high surtax rates of the gross sales tax law, and an extension of the 2 per cent consumers' sales tax.

Vital to Budget.

Retention of these additional taxes will be necessary in order to meet the $52,000,000 requirements set forth in the biennial budget bill, to support the school system and the State governmental departments.

The planning board that assisted in drawing up the proposed projects recently was appointed by Gov. Kump. The members are W. P. Wilson, of Wheeling; Trammell Hollis, of Martinsburg; L. T. Putnam, of Beckley; C. L. Jarrett, State labor commissioner; Road Commissioner Bailey; H. W. Shawhan, State director of conservation; Dr. A. E. McClue, State health commissioner; J. B. McLaughlin, State commissioner of agriculture; W. W. Trent, State superintendent of schools, and Dr. C. O. Orton, of the West Virginia University at Morgantown.

While the liquor bill conferees labored for several days last week to reach agreements, the House of Delegates worked over several important measures, which it sent to the Senate, with little hope of having them pass that body.

By almost a unanimous vote the House approved a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to authorize issuance by the State of $10,000,000 in bonds to be used to pay a bonus to World War veterans. If passed by the Senate, it would be submitted to the voters in the 1936 general election. Under its provisions, the money would be paid to about 58,000 West Virginia veterans, at the rate of $15 for each month served during the war, but no one would receive more than $300.

Labor Bill Passed.

The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill designed to liberalize the workmen's compensation law. The chief feature of the bill is that it would permit injured workmen, who are denied compensation by the commissioner, to appeal to a circuit court on questions of law or fact. Under present law, they can appeal to the supreme court only on questions of law. Delegate Ralph M. Hiner, of Pendleton County, sponsor of the measure, said its enactment, would "give to West Virginia workers the equity they are entitled to."

Another proposed constitutional amendment, which the House passed, and sent to the Senate, would increase Legislators' salaries from $500 to $1,000 a year, and in addition allow them $6 a day for expenses during extra sessions. If passed, it too would be submitted to the voters at the 1936 election. Introduction of the resolution was inspired by memories of last year, when the lawmakers were held in extra session for more than 200 days, and received no extra compensation, even for expenses, and many of them had to borrow from banks by pledging their next year's salary in order to maintain themselves at the capitol.

The House last week also passed a bill granting increases of salaries from $8,000 a year to $10,000 for the five judges of the supreme court of appeals. The judges accepted 20 per cent reductions in their salaries three years ago, when economy was forced upon the State.

'Next Governor' Is Main Topic As Virginia Peers Into 1937

By C. B. Carr.

An unusual situation appears to be developing in the Virginia political arena in that although local elections are the order of the day and the Presidential and congressional try-out comes next season, one hears as much if not more talk of "who will be the next Governor," to be elected in 1937, than of the candidates who will stand in the imminent elections.

The unusual situation appears to have arisen through no lack of interest in Presidents, Congressmen, sheriffs, etc., but rather because the field never was more promising with possible gubernatorial timber to succeed Gov. George C. Peery than at this date.

Almost any political leader in Virginia will admit there are five persons outstanding in the Virginia political realm to the extent that a "push" of their candidacy might result in a decided gubernatorial boom.

The quintet includes Lieut. Gov. James H. Price, now serving his second term in that office, which also carries the presidency of the State Senate; J. Sinclair Brown, Salem, speaker of the House of Delegates; Ashton Dovell, Williamsburg, floor leader of the House of Delegates; William E. Carson, Riverton, former chairman of the Virginia Commission on Conservation and Development, and Thomas G. Burch, Martinsville, member of the House of Representatives from the Fifth Virginia District.

For some months past friends of Carson have been boosting him as a suitable choice by the Democrats for their standard bearer, it being generally conceded in Old Dominion circles that the Democratic nomination is tantamount to election. Those boosting Carson declare his service, without remuneration, as chairman of the Conservation and Development Commission, has set him aside in a class which could be labeled "service above above self." They also declare Carson's wide friendship among influential persons of the State would make him a "well-known" candidate.

"Price for Governor."

For many months the friends of Lieut. Gov. Price, and there are conceded to be thousands of them throughout the Old Dominion, have been talking "Price for Governor." Boosters of Price point out he served one term as lieutenant governor and then was elected to a second term by a vote which lead the ticket. His personal popularity, knowledge of Virginia needs gained through six years of leadership of the State Senate and his political acumen gathered through work in the Democratic ranks of many years standing make him the "ideal candidate" for the Governor's chair, his friends here hold.

Although Lieut. Gov. Price has been silent as to seeking the governorship, his friends declare the "Price-for-Governor" view has gained momentum throughout the State in recent months.

Within the last week or so, Dovell has announced his candidacy for the speakership of the House of Delegates. As floor leader in the 1934 Assembly he was brought into the public gaze and if he is made speaker of the House for the 1936 session, his popularity and acquaintanceship throughout the State will be materially enhanced, it is claimed.

J. Sinclair Brown, who was the last speaker of the House of Delegates, is said to have a strong following along two lines—political and financial. Besides being a Democratic leader and legislator of many years standing, Brown is in line this time for the presidency of the Virginia Bankers Association. For some time he has been mentioned as gubernatorial timber and it is said the Roanoke and Salem sector may soon take strong hold of Brown as a gubernatorial offering. The section has not had a man in the Governor's mansion for a number of years.

Congressman Burch is reputed to be "one of the most popular men" the Fifth Virginia District has ever produced. And his popularity is declared at its height at present, largely because he backed the AAA tobacco reduction program and his constitutents, mostly tobacco farmers, are reaping a harvest under its terms. He strongly supports the Roosevelt policies, which are popular in several other Virginia districts in addition to the one Burch represents.

Little has been said of Burch's gubernatorial candidacy. However, some of his friends declare it is being "quietly talked."

Judge Denies Receivership For Berry Mill

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 24.—Judge Albert A. Doub, in the Allegany County Circuit Court, in denying a petition for receivership for the Berry Factory, Peter E. Berry, proprietor, yesterday, commented on "alphabetical agencies of the Federal Government" and "modern social philosophy."

The petition was filed in behalf of Harry Sharrets, Richard Hamilton and other employes of the plant, who claim back wages due.

The court reviewed testimony which shows that approximately $1,000 is due the employes in wages, and these claims were admitted by Berry as correct. The petitioners alleged Berry was insolvent and his mill was becoming dilapidated.

Insolvency Denied.

Berry denied he was insolvent and declared he had ample unencumbered property to meet his obligations. He asserted his mill had an appraisal value of over $100,000.

Judge Doub, in his opinion, said banking firms had made no effort to enforce payment. Berry, the court contended, could easily operate his factory now at a profit if the silk market justified resumption. It was shown that he intended to pay in full and that already he had settled with some claimants.

Judge Doub, in summing up said: "This is a small factory that is closed down either as the result of strikes in the textile industry, or rules adopted by one of the alphabetical agencies of the Federal Government, or both."

Seaworthy Fugitives Escape

Mix Brothers, Pursued by State and Morgan County Police, Swim Icy Potomac and Disappear Into Maryland Woods.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 24.—The icy flood waters of the Potomac meant nothing to the two Mix brothers—first names not learned by police—in their flight from State and Morgan County police yesterday.

The two, wanted in Randolph County, W. Va., on an assault charge, had been visiting relatives at Green Ridge since their flight from Randolph, police learned. When they reached the Morgan County home the fugitives took flight.

They plunged into the river, swollon by recent rains and thaws, at a point near Green Ridge and headed for the Maryland side. The current carried them downstream some distance, but they battled their way across for a half-hour and scrambled out on the Maryland bank, negotiated the water in the old canal which then confronted them and disappeared into nearby woods.

Schools, Jobs, Money Gone, 'Relocated' Mountaineers Wait

Homestead Plan Delay Gives Virginians Uncertain Future.

By Elizabeth C. Taylor.
A Special Correspondent.

Luray, Feb. 24.—Pending its renewal under a revision of existing authority in legislation or by transfer to another governmental agency, the plan for relocating the mountain people displaced from the Shenandoah Park area is temporarily at a standstill. To those to be displaced, the situation has become acute.

The persons who have lived in the mountains for generations as "squatters," owners, or caretakers face a serious problem. Those who had work as caretakers of the large grazing fields along the top of the Blue Ridge Mountain country are now unemployed, since the owner was paid for the condemned land and naturally saw no need for paying a caretaker longer. The "squatters" are unable to relocate themselves. Schooling for the mountian children is almost impossible, since the removal of many of the schools following the condemnation of the land.

FERA Survey Made.

When the park was being considered, a FERA survey was made to determine the situation of the people who would be evicted. The questions asked about the total number of acres used by the family for cultivation and for pasture, the food and forage crops grown, relief assistance received and names and ages of the members of the family.

This last question is of importance in plans for the people up in homestead communities on a long-term repayment plan.

Questions were asked concerning the shelter, furnishings, clothing, farm and garden implements and live stock. Enumerators, chosen for their knowledge of the people, also asked the exact income of the family and its source for the past year, and the equity in the land on which they were living. Attitude toward the proposed plan for relocation in subsistence homestead communities outside, but reasonably near, the park was also asked.

The subsistence homestead plan provided for the buying of community sites in the valley and piedmont sections and their division into homesteads which were to be sold to persons who had no other plans for relocation on easy terms, contemplating the ultimate repayment of 100 per cent. Each homesteader would have a garden or farming plot of land, a house, live stock and farming equipment, and an interest in community grazing and wood land. Each site would have a community building and workshop. With this plan in sight, committees were appointed to choose sites. Six locations were selected after examination of 200 tracts.

Willing to Move.

One of the prospective homesteaders, questioned on his attitude on moving to a Government site, said that if conditions in the mountains were the same as ten or more years ago, he would rather stay, but "Now it seems the only thing to do." Since the schools had been withdrawn after the condemnation of the area, his children had difficulty getting any schooling, he said.

Of the 480 families living in the mountains before the creation of the park, some have already relocated themselves temporarily. Only about 20 families refused the permits and against these, eviction writs have been obtained.

To Get Modern Homes When Federal Work Is Resumed.

Before the temporary halting of the homesteading project, conducted under the division of subsistence homesteads of the Department of the Interior, plans had been drawn for the purchase of land and building of homes on the land which would provide for those moved from the park area. A house, from two to six rooms, five to eight acres of land for cultivation and an interest in community land, was to be provided. The plan included not only the homes but buildings, fencing, water, live stock and equipment, all to be furnished as a part of the loan.

The Ida Valley site of 350 acres near Luray, which was purchased before the project was temporarily stopped, was subdivided into 28 lots. A tract of 375 acres near Geer, in Greene County, was contracted for, but acquisition has been deferred until the project is resumed. The total amount needed is about 4,000 acres.

Plans are ready for the continuation of the work as soon as authorization is had from the governmental agency, Congress, or the President designates its course.

The building cost of the houses suggested for the homesteads ranges from $348 to $1,057. The preliminary project, designated "Shenandoah National Park Evacuation and Subsistence Homesteads Survey," under the supervision of L. Ferdinand Zerkel, of Luray, furnished a large amount of the necessary information as to the needs of the people.

Tasks Ahead For Assembly In Maryland

Only Five Weeks Left to Dispose of Growing Mass of Work.

A Special Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 24.—With only five weeks of its 90-day session remaining, the Maryland General Assembly will reconvene tomorrow night and the solons are becoming aware that a mass of work is on the legislative calendar to be disposed of in that comparatively short time. Moreover, the legislative hoppers of the respective houses are expected to be flooded by additional proposals during the next three weeks, after which the customary dead line for introductions will be established.

The financial program will continue to occupy the spot light for some time. A number of emergency revenue measures relating thereto already are on the files, but action on these, as well as on budget appropriations, will be deferred until information pertaining to the extent of Federal aid is forthcoming.

Gov. Harry W. Nice and other State officials, together with fiscal leaders in the Senate and House, are extremely anxious to get the "low down" on this.

Data Being Prepared.

Meanwhile an estimate of every phase of the State's financial situation is in course of preparation to be delivered to United States Senators Millard E. Tydings and George R. Radcliffe, who in turn will present it to Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator. This move was decided upon at a conference a few days ago, the Governor taking a leading part in the parley.

Gov. Nice will usher in the legislative week tomorrow night, when he will go on the air for a "fireside talk" to the people of the State. He will broadcast from a Baltimore station, talking about 45 minutes. The Governor, it is understood, will discuss finances in general, with particular reference to the proposed investigation of banking and operations of governmental departments of the State during the administration of former Gov. Ritchie.

The Governor has asked the Legislature for an appropriation of $150,000 to carry out this plan and now he wants to give the people details of the need for such an inquiry, in view of the unfavorable attitude of the Democratic Assembly.

Hearings Slated.

Committees are slated to buckle down to work in earnest during the week. Additional hearings on budget slashes are scheduled before the Senate finance and House ways and means committees and scores of other measures likewise will come under review.

Among the first of more important hearings will be that on the milk bill, scheduled Tuesday before a joint meeting of the agriculture and judiciary committees, and expected to draw a large representation of dairy interests. The pending measure is designed to set up a milk-control commission. It was drafted at the instance of the farm bureau of Frederick County, one of the largest milk-producing sectors of the State.

Ekky's Racing Career Over; Whitney Ace to be Sent to Stud

Finding Foes For Kansan Difficult

Defeat of Hornbostel Removes Worry From Cunningham.

Pair to Clash Saturday in Three-Quarter Mile at Kansas City.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—The prospect of finding competition for the great Glenn Cunningham, at any distance, looked discouraging today for indoor athletic meet promoters, following the sudden and unexpected slump of Chuck Hornbostel, the one racer who figured to have a chance of extending Galloping Glenn in forthcoming special events.

Hornbostel, like Cunningham, entered the national senior A. A. U. championships at Madison Square Garden last night with an unbeaten, record-breaking slate to his credit for the current indoor campaign. In fact, the former University of Indiana star had been undefeated for three successive indoor seasons in the East. But whereas the celebrated "iron horse" from Kansas emerged with another decisive triumph over his two Eastern rivals—Bill Bonthron and Gene Venzke—and set a new world indoor record of 3:50.5 for 1,500 meters, Hornbostel failed to muster even a serious gesture in defense of the 1,000-meter championship. Long-legged Chuck wound up sixth in a field of seven as his title passed to Oklahoma's sturdy Glen Dawson.

Meet Next Saturday.

Cunningham, consequently, has nothing to worry about in preparing his match race with Hornbostel at three-quarters of a mile, slated next Saturday night in Kansas City. Upon the outcome of this race will depend tentative negotiations to bring the pair together again in a special 1,000-yard event at the Knighs of Columbus meet, which winds up the New York track season on March 16.

Hornbostel undoubtedly was handicapped by being elbowed sharply by rivals on either side of him at the start of last night's race. One accidental blow caught him in the stomach. He made no complaints, however, after the race, in which he faded abruptly after one fruitless move to overtake the pace-setters. The tall Hoosier, now taking a postgraduate course at Harvard, told Daniel J. Ferris, secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., that he had been obliged to cut down his training program in order to concentrate on his studies. For that reason, among others, he felt he was not in shape to try for the 600-meter title as well as the 1,000 last night. Three weeks ago Hornbostel set a new world record for 600 yards on the Garden track.

Owens Bright Prospect.

The latest sensation in an extraordinary crop of star colored athletes, Jesse Owens, of Ohio State, emerged as the most versatile performer in the A. A. U. championships and one of Uncle Sam's brightest prospects for the 1936 Olympic games. Owens, in retaining the broad jump crown, cleared 25 feet 9 inches. This compares with the world outdoor mark of 26 feet 2⅛ inches, held by Japan's Chuhei Nambu.

Coming back in quest of more honors in the 60-meter dash, Owens lowered the world record to 6.6 seconds in the semifinals, but then got away to a poor start in the final and was beaten in a close finish by Ben Johnson, Columbia University Negro, who also was clocked in the new record time of 6.6. The defending sprint king, Ralph Metcalfe, of Marquette, was eliminated in Owens' semifinal heat and thereby suffered his first setback in championship competition since the Olympic games of 1932. Owens, a former Cleveland High School star, who is only in his Sophomore year at Ohio State, is the greatest all-around Negro athlete developed since Dehart Hubbard was capturing broad jump and sprint championships for the University of Michigan. The dusky buckeye bullet is considered a cinch to surpass all broad-jumping records.

The half-dozen athletes who broke or equaled world records last night did not include Jack Torrance, Louisiana State's shot-putting Goliath. In his second attempt at indoor competition Torrance did no better than 49 feet 7 inches, more than 3 feet shy of the indoor record, and far below his own outdoor standard of 57 feet 1 inch. He was all set to smash the record with a rubber-covered shot, but, when this bounced dangerously among officials during practice Torrance was asked to desist and confine himself to the regulation, leather-covered, nonbounding missile.

Maryland Crippled as Two Boxers Are Hurt.

By the Associated Press.

College Park, Md., Feb. 24.—Although Maryland tied for second place and crowned two champions in the Southern Conference boxing tournament at University, Va., last week-end, it cost the Terps the services of two good fighters for the remainder of the season.

Ivan "The Terrible" Nedomatsky, who defeated Duke's Jack Kneipp for the lightweight title, broke his left thumb in the fight. Lyman McAboy, who was to meet Al Mann, also of Duke, for the junior middleweight title, broke an upper bone in his index finger and was forced to forfeit.

Maryland will miss both these men when Army invades College Park next Saturday. The Terps' last contest is with Catholic University March 11.

10 Nat Rookies Reach Camp At Biloxi

Cronin and Bride, on Way to Sarasota, Pay Visit to Clark Griffith.

By a Special Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., Feb. 24.—The arrival of 10 rookie pitchers here today marked the beginning of the largest training camp ever conducted by the Washington Nationals. By the time the last group reports on March 10 more than 50 ball players will be wearing Washington livery.

By May 15, however, there well be many disappointed players as this squad must be pared down to the player limit of 25.

About noon Orville Armbrust and Sidney Cohen, both pitchers from the Chattanooga Club, put in their appearance, Cohen coming from his home in El Paso, Tex., and Armbrust from Little Rock, Ill. Cohen brust from Little Rock, Ark. Cohen is a left-hander and Armbrust throws from the right side. Both joined the Nationals at the fag end of last season.

Joe Cronin and his bride also arrived to visit Clark Griffith and will remain until tomorrow night when they will continue to the Red Sox camp at Sarasota, Fla. Joe is confident his Red Sox will be in the money at the finish of the race. He says everything depends on the pitchers.

More Men Arrive.

At 6:05 p. m. the rookies and newspapermen arrived from Washington. Walter Johnson, who was on his way to his own Cleveland training camp at New Orleans, La., was on the same train. Those arrivng with him were Hugh Mulcahy, Reese Diggs, Dick Lanahan, Archie Scrivener, Dick Etts and Coppola, all pitchers. Lanahan and Scrivener are Washington boys, while Diggs is a Marylander.

Two other Washington boys arrived here today to cast their lot at ther own expense. They are Doug Winfield, a first baseman who throws right and bats left, and Emil Smith, a right-handed young catcher. Both boys were members last season of the Bennings CCC camp team which won about 50 out of 55 games played and were champions of the Seventeenth CCC Corps area. Winfield, in particular, was recommended to Nick Altrock by Dr. Hollingsworth, an Anacostia physician.

La Rowe, Ill, Praises Va. Boxers

Will Get Well, Now That Team Won Tourney, Wife Asserts.

By Bill McCormick
A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Feb. 24.—"Pish, tush and piffle," said Johnny LaRowe, 67-year-old big chief of boxing at Virginia, referring to a remark we had tossed about the manner in which his braves went on the warpath to win their fifth consecutive Southern Conference boxing championship last night.

"Giving me all that credit for winning is purely pish, tush and piffle. Don't give me all the praise for producing a winning team—give those kids who were in there getting socked on the nose the break. Without a group of boys pulling together and following orders the way those kids did, Virginia wouldn't have got to first base in the tournament this year—Johnny LaRowe or no Johnny LaRowe."

The old stalwart was warming up to his subject. He was holding court from the sick bed to which he has been confined for weeks. Grouped about him were a favored few, including one law student who would rather see Archie Hahn toss left hooks than hear Blackstone toss a legal phrase, one old grad who boxed for Johnny when the team was in its infancy and, luckily enough, the writer.

Cites Bad Luck.

"I never saw a team so beset by troubles as we were from about the middle of the dual meet season," LaRowe continued, drawing a rebuking eye from the old grad by trying to prop himself up on elbow to emphasize his remarks. "Just before the North Carolina meet this pesky leg started giving me the mischief again and they put the old man to bed. On the way to North Carolina, Hal Stuart, our freshman coach, got sick and had to be taken off the train and rushed back to the hospital here.

"Bill McClung, a darned good 155-pounder, cracked up his business hand, practically putting us out of the running in that class. Then Morty Caplin, our regular 165-pounder, hurt his right hand and got a bad nose. We didn't know until the last minute whether Morty would be able to fight in the tournament or not.

Womer Worried.

"Then Mutt Womer had a pretty big thing to worry about, and it looked for a while as though he was going to pieces," continued the Knute Rockne of boxing. The "pretty big thing to worry about" was the nervous breakdown of Womer's older brother, Henry, a law student who wins such baubles as Phi Beta Kappa keys with incredible ease. "All in all, it looked as though we might not pull through, but those kids got out there and worked perfectly, did everything they should, just as they should do it—and we won. So, son, you see I'm not entitled to all the credit."

We ventured to remark that we bet old Johnny was hoping to beat the band to win the particular tournament which passed into history Friday and Saturday.

"Son, I never hope any more," chortled the venerable warrior, turning to the old grad. "Mike here came along for the boxing squad, made the team and looked like $1,000,000. He won his first two fights by knockouts against awfully classy opposition, and old Johnny began hoping he had a great fighter. Along comes the third opponent for Mike and he don't look half as good as the first two. Bang! he clocks Mike in the belly—and there went my great fighter. He did turn into a very good fighter, however, and he came out a bigger and better man, which is all we want to do with our boxing team."

Listened to Bouts.

As Mrs. LaRowe led us to the door, we asked her if the old war horse had listened to radio accounts of the bouts. Rumors had been rampant before and during the conference that the grand old man of Virginia would never rise

N. C. and Duke Boast Best Records, but Others Are Dangerous.

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 24.—Although North Carolina's White Phantoms and Duke's Blue Devils have impressive records, there is an atmosphere of uncertainity over the Southern Conference basket ball tournament which will send hundreds to witness the action of on the hardwood at Raleigh next Thursday.

The season at an end, except for Tuesday night clashes bringing together Virginia Tech and V. M. I. at Blacksburg, and Virginia and Washington and Lee at Lynchburg, the North Carolinians have won 12 and lost only one contest. This one game was dropped to Duke's Devils, whose record of 10 victories and four defeats keeps them in the runner-up role.

Flashy work at the season's close by the Red Terrors of North Carolina State and the not-to-b-ecounted-out Gamecocks of South Carolina is giving the favorites plenty of worry.

Finally Won, 37-35.

The White Phantoms had to call Lady Luck pleadingly last week to turn back State, 37 to 35, in a contest in which the lead changed near the end of the game. The Gamecocks showed championship form last night in soundly trouncing Washington and Lee's Generals, 48 to 30.

V. M. I., Clemson, Washington and Lee and an improved Virginia team are all considered dangerous opponents in tournament play, having exhibited rare form on several occasions during the season, although Washington and Lee is not a favorite to hold the conference crown.

Maryland and Virginia Tech are the only conference teams not to enter the tournament.

North Carolina, Duke Seeded as Favorites

By the Associated Press.

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 24 (AP).—North Carolina and Duke were seeded today as the favorites to lead eight competing teams into the annual Southern conference basket ball tournament opening here Thursday.

The conference basket ball committee, headed by Dr. A. J. Wilson of N. C. State College, seeded and paired the teams today as it completed plans for the event.

N. C. State vs. V. M. I., 3 p. m.
Duke vs. Virginia, 4:30 p. m.
Clemson vs. Washington and Lee, 8 p. m.
North Carolina vs. South Carolina, 9:30 p. m.

Richmond Five To Seek 20th Tomorrow

Faces W. & M. in Last of '35; Has State Title Won Easily.

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 24.—Richmond's Spiders, so far ahead in the State basket ball race that there is no competition, wind up the season with William and Mary here Tuesday night in an effort to score their twentieth straight victory.

A decided underdog, William and Mary has been improving, and—well, there are plenty of upsets in Indian-Spider rivalry. Even so, the odds are on the Spiders, one of the finest teams in Old Dominion history.

The Spiders made it 19 straight last night with a sound 50-to-30 trouncing of a smart Cadet team from V. M. I. that was defeated the night before by William and Mary, 43 to 36. Earlier in the week Richmond nosed out Washington and Lee, 25 to 21, in a battle with thrills aplenty.

Virginia Plays W. and L.

The Spider-Indian clash comes as the climax of a week which witnesses the end of the State basket ball season. Virginia and Washington and Lee battle on Tuesday night at Lynchburg and V. M. I. and Virginia Tech have an encounter at the same time in Blacksburg.

Virginia drew a tight hold on second place in the State race by overwhelming the luckless Virginia Tech team, 54 to 31, last week, and later dropped a 1-pointer to an out-of-State quintet from Maryland, 32 to 33. William and Mary, downing the apprentice school and Washington and Lee easily held third.

Virginia, V. M. I. and Washington and Lee were looking to the Southern Conference tournament at Raleigh Thursday after finishing up their local rivalries. Tech will not enter the tourney.

*Richmond	16	0	668	381
Virginia	10	4	485	371
William and Mary	8	7	435	391

Legs Unable To Hold Up On Track

Azucar to Come East After Competing at Bay Meadows.

ARCADIA, Calif., Feb. 24.—Equipoise has run his last race.

From a source close to the C. V. Whitney racing establishment comes the word that the great son of Pennant-Swinging is through. Those uncertain legs which, due only to miraculous care, have made Ekky the greatest horse since the racing days of Man O'War and Sun Beau, have finally cracked beyond repair. All hope of having Equipoise add to his total of $338,460 in earnings and thus pass Sun Beau's record figure have been abandoned.

Within the next few days, I am informed, announcement of Equipoinse's retirement from racing will be made and the mahogany-colored 7-year-old will be sent to the stud where he would have been for the last two years had not the honor of being the greatest money-winner been set as his objective.

Press box experts either did not see anything wrong with Equipoise as Jockey Sonny Workman brought him back to the paddock or they were too busy watching the Azucar ceremonies to make an eye inspection. However, horsemen noticed that Ekky favored his right front leg, in a manner which indicated that he had a bowed tendon.

Workman Comments.

This leg was supposed to be his sound front one, not having given him trouble in three years. The left front leg, blamed for Equipoise's habit of bearing over in the stretch, had been the question mark as he prepared for the Santa Anita Handicap, and has kept the horse out of training several times in the past two years.

Although written records of yesterday's race are bolling over with accounts of Equipoise's poor racing luck, Sonny Workman simply says, "I wasn't riding Equipoise." The Washington rider denied that he was blocked, bumped or forced to keep his mount in a pocket.

"I was satisfied with my position at the half pole. In fact, I chose my own running room," Workman said today. "I had openings repeatedly. If I had the real Ekky, under me I could have gone through that break along the rail used by Woolf (Azucar's jockey). I was first to have a crack at thta opening."

Had Colorful Career.

While Workman admitted that there was "something wrong" with the horse, he would not go into details, and I'm not trying to be sentimental when I say he had tears in the corner of his eyes whenever he mentioned Equipoise.

The Whitney star has had a colorful racing career and probably has drawn more columns in the press than any other horse. He has made 51 starts and was the official winner of 30 races. Ekky was disqualified three times, once as a 2-year-old; last year when Mr. Khayyam profitted by a ruling in New York and again early last week when he was alleged to have borne over on Twenty Grand in the Santa Anita stretch.

Equipoise has been second nine times, third four times and finished out of the money officially only five times.

Promising as Sire.

Much is expected of the courageous Ekky in the study. He comes from a line of fertile sires and his get will be eagerly awaited. His own foaling had a measure of luck involved. Equipoise was foaled on January 1. Had he come into this world a day sooner he would have been officially a year older (due to all horses having birthdays on January 1) than Twenty Grand and Mate, rivals of his 3-year-old campaign.

Equipoise, despite his bad legs, managed to survive the grueling preparation for the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness which has cut short thec areer of many of our best horses. Twenty Grand had to be nursed back to the races. Calvacade is now paying the penalty of his 3-year-old racing. The same goes for Head Play. Broker's Tip is one of those which smudged out entirely by being pointed for just one big race.

There have been reports to the effect that young C. V. Whitney would retire from racing when Equipoise's active career ended. These have been vigorously denied

Azucar's Ex-Trainer Failed to Bet on Him

Copyright by The Post.

"THE best horse I ever saw—that is for a jumper."

It was Tim Donahue talking yesterday at his apartment at Cathedral Mansions, Connecticut and Cathedral avenues northwest, and the subject was: Azucar—the discarded horse that went to glory Saturday by winning the featured stake at Santa Anita, defeating the best of the turf—Equipose, Twenty Grand, Ladysman and a flock of others. Donahue is a veteran jockey and trainer and the man who developed the Irish horse with the Spanish name.

"I knew Azucar (Donahus pronounces it with the accent on the second syllable, because, as he says, that's the way it's pronounced in Spanish) would win that race, but, you know, it's a funny thing, and you'll probably laugh, but I didn't have a dime on him."

Donahue waxed eloquent about how Joseph E. Widener, former owner of Azucar bought the little horse in Ireland and how he insisted on the Spanish pronunciation of the name because in the language of the Dons it means just one thing—sugar.

Developed Fast.

"I had Azucar for three years," said Donahue. "When Mr. Widener first bought him in Ireland and brought him over here he was just a small horse and very thin. It was in July and I began training him. He developed fast.

"We entered him in some race—I've forgotten jjust what it was—at Belmont. And did that little stranger show his class. He won hands down, took the first jump and kept on keeping them, ahead of the field . . . You ask what price he paid? . . . Well, I'll be frank, I can't say exactly now, but it was pretty good."

Flash! Equipoise Was Beaten! Could You Run With 130 Lbs.?

By Paul Gallico.
A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—You will all be delighted, I know, my good friends, to learn that today I have prepared for you a column of brisk and pithy comment upon the Great Santa Anita handicap run yesterday at the Santa Anita Track ner Los Angeles. And all the more will you be delighted when you learn that I was not there for the event, and do not know very much about horse racing, anyway.

However, it was a very great sporting event and a columnist is supposed to comment on all great sporting events whether he was there or not, just to show that he knows what it is all about and that he has some opinions in the matter, and also to show that he has a sense, of news and knows not to write about a basket ball game in Tuscaloosa on the day after a big horse race in Los Angeles. Well, pretty soon, I guess I will quit stalling and begin to write some pretty hot comment on this horse race, comment that will no doubt interest you one and all, and surprise you with its fresh, givorous viewpoint, its uncompromising frankness, and unflinching honesty.

To begin with, $127,000 is a lot of money to win on a horse race. It is a lot of money just off by itself. Take a look at it off by itself—$127,000. It looks even more if you write it out—one hundred and twenty seven thousand dollars. One hundred thousand dollars is a lot of money, too, and so is fifty thousand. You wouldn't kick a $100 in the face, either. Has anybody got the loan of a dollar until next Friday?

Azucar, the winner, paid only $26.80 for $2 in the mutuels to win, which, if you ask me, is a lousy price in a field like that and somebody got gyped. We wouldn't stand for that sort of thing around here. Not much. (Note—Gentlemen and ladies who had a $5 bet down on Azucar are not complaining. They

Mutuel 'Take' Is Reduced as Santa Anita Meet Is Extended.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

ARCADIA, Calif., Feb. 24.—Jockey Sonny Workman received 45 telegrams of condolence on Equipoise defeat yesterday in the $100,000 added Sana Anita Handicap . . . He cherished one from his mother, which read, "Equipoise must have been tired. You are still the greatest jockey in the world. Love" . . . The Santa Anita racing meeting, scheduled to close yesterday, has been extended two weeks . . . And the mutuel "take" has been reduced from 9 to 6 per cent . . . Also claiming purses have been advanced to $1,000 from $800 . . .

J. Ed Hunter, Mrs. Jane Hobday,

Even if I'm in California, I can recognize the coincidence in Florida when Empty Bottly, Groggy and Wha Hae were the money horses in the first race at Hileah yesterday . . . Sounds like the morning after . . . Met Bing Crosby last night . . . He owns three race horses . . . But will not race them in Maryland, he says . . . Azucar's name is pronounced "As-zoo-cur" with accent on the "zoo" . . .

Los Angles autoists drive 30 miles an hour in the 20-mile zones and 45 miles an hour in the 30-mile zone . . . There are few arrests for speeding . . . However, reckless driving is a very serious offense . . . And all convicted, in addition to paying fines, are taken to the morgue where they must look at bodies, many those of traffic victims . . . Grewsome, perhaps, but effective, says the local chief of police . . . San Francisco is very jealous of the success of Santa Anita's race track, so I'm told . . . Los Angeles school children have especially strong metal desks . . . And they are trained to get under the min case of an earthquake.

Jew fish, many weighing from 500 to 800 pounds, are caught regularly along the Southern aClifornia Coast. . . . They are said to be overgrown sea bass. . . . Santa Anita features two racing devices which should be used in Maryland. . . . The photo finish placer and the automatic timer. . . . After all close finishes the result is not official until the negative has been developed. . . .

The picture, in addition to showing the order of finish, reveals the exact time of the race. . . . Yesterday, five human clockers averaged 2:02 1-5 for the handicap. . . . But the picture showed 2:02. . . . What does a jockey do on his day off? . . . Alfred Robertson, the Next Sunday's Results.

Miller Furniture vs. New York Avenue.
Sherwood vs. Occoquan.
Italian A. C. vs. Georgetown.
Sun Radio vs. Virginia Avenue.

ITALIAN A. C. took the lead in the Recreation Soccer League yesterday by defeating Virginia Avenue, 3-0, while Sun Radio moved into second place by reason of its forfeit victory over New York Avenue. Miller Furniture went into fourth behind Virginia Avenue by defeating Sherwood, 3-1.

The first half of the feature game was slow and without interest except for Davidson's well-taken goal, the lanky half back, transferred to the forward line temporarily, heading a well-placed corner by Dante Avon past Andre after 34 minutes' play. The Italians had a slight edge in midfield but were wear near the goal.

Virginia Avenue lacked general teamwork and its efforts to score came principally from Barry, although Frank had two nice tries, one a corner which passed all the way across the goal a yard from the line but without a friendly foot to put it through. Other leaders in the Virginia Avenue attack were Mitchell and Aquilino, but neither could get past the Italian full backs, and the half ended with Italians one goal ahead.

Score Third Goal.

Soon after resumption of play Bruzzese shot from 12 yards out and the ball was only partially stopped by Andre and went through, and both teams then settled down to a hard battle. A dash up-field by Barry resulted in a corner which Chacoans cleared, Croci getting the ball and in turn forcing a corner off Wells. The kick sailed into Andre, who in attempting to clear fisted the ball against Wells and it bounced back into the net for the Italian's third goal.

Virginia avenue had a bigger share of the honors from then until the finish, forcing several corners which worried the Italian defense considerably, but none produced the desired goal.

Millions Hard Pressed.

Miller Furniture was hard pressed by Sherwood, but was more accurate at goal, although Sherwood had several good tries in the closing minutes. Both teams lacked some of their best players. Miller led, 1 to 0, at the half, the lone Sherwood goal coming near the end of the game, which was featured by a splendid solo run on the part of Lewis through half of the Sherwood eleven, finishing with a shot which beat Goffi all the way.

New York avenue could muster only six players and was forced to forfeit to Sun Radio.

Whitney rider, went horse back riding yesterday. . . . With some of the movie people. . . . Azucar was purchased for $8,000 with the idea of entering him in the Grand National Steeplechase. . . . He was not considered exceptionally speedy on the flat until he worked a mile in 1:38.

Not a jockey that came here especially for the big race finished amon gthe first four. . . . Meade, Coucci, Jones and Arcaro, who flew over from Florida, left on the same plane last night for Hialeah. . . . "Jock" Whitney also was a passenger. . . . There are 21 missions in California. . . . Saw Joe Louis, the senational Detroit heavyweight, knock out Lee Ramage, the other night. . . . His first fly like an adder with two tongues. . . . And he hits as hard with his left as he does with his right. . . . Twenty years old and ready for anyone Baer. . . . Built on the order of Young Van. . . . Very unassuming fellow as the white folks stood around in his dressing room watching his rubdown. . . . Los Angeles would like to stage that Louis-Bater fight. . . . Long's Former Critic Wins Shooting Honors

Boonville, Mo., Feb. 24 (AP).—Sam Montague, champion collegiate marksman of 1934, who was banished from Louisiana State University for criticizing Senator Huey Long, fired a score of 399 out of 400 here last night to give high individual honors to his new allegiance, the University of Missouri.

Montague won the individual prone championship over a field of 415 contestants in the sixth annual indoor Camp Perry matches staged by Kemper Military School.

Germans Upset Bethlehem's Booters

Penalty Kicks a Deciding Factor in D. C. Team's 4-to-2 Victory.

THE German-American Soccer Club sprang a surprise yesterday at Benning by defeating the highly touted Bethlehem Club, of Baltimore, 4 to 2.

Ability to make all penalty kicks while Baltimore failed on its two chances was a deciding factor in the local team's triumph.

The Orioles scored on a pass from Lawrence Banaskat to Louie Evans that bested the goalie, Watson, on a well-placed shot. Five minutes later Louie Edward tied the score with a hard low shot from the 16-yard line.

Al Guckert, of Bethlehem failed to put his team in the lead on a penalty kick that Goalie Watson made. Following their fine recovery, the Germans opened up a series of passes, and

Heurich Spurts in Last Half to Rout Penn A. C. Five, 44 to 27

Evans Leads Attack With 11 Points

Brewers, Trailing, 19-17, at Half, Rally to Win Third Straight.

HEURICH BREWERS showed too much class for the Penn Athletic Club in the second half of their basket ball game at the Heurich gym yesterday, and won, 44-27, for their third straight victory of the season.

It was the case of a good professional quintet crossing paths with a pretty good amateur outfit, and the pros, conquerors of the World Champion Spahs and the New Britain (Conn.) Mules, surpassed their rivals in all departments of play.

Barney Berlinger, University of Pennsylvania's Olympic star, was in the Quaker City line-up. Used at center, he did well for a while, at least for the first half, but was relegated to a minor role with the rest of the Penn boys when Heurich's Brewers start hitting on all cylinders in the closing period. Getting all 5 points, Berlinger couldn't get the jump once on Big Joe Croson, the former Duke University ace, and that is one reason why the home boys piled up such a large score.

Penn Leads at Half.

Penn, also boasting the former Catholic University captain, Ed White, had Heurich worried in the first half when it accumulated an 8-4 lead after ten minutes of play and rounded the turn ahead, 19 to 17. During those 20 minutes Heurich tied the score at 8-all, and led for the first time at 12-11. Just before the whistle for intermission, Vince Walters looped in a long shot to give Penn its 2-point advantage.

Heurich went like a house afire in the second session, as Ralph Bennie, silenced in the first half, popped away for three goals; Moon Evans enlarged his total to five goals; Croson got two; Johnny Fenlon two, and Buckey Buscher and Ev Russell, one each.

When Heurich zoomed ahead at 23-22 there was no stopping thereafter, for hot lead was being pumped into the hoops every minute by the Brewers.

Evans Tops Scorers.

Evans took scoring honors with 11 points, while Walters, with nine markers, was the seige gun of Penn.

Buzz McDonald, the bespectacled former University of Penn star, was a bundle of speed for 20 minutes, but then he ran out of wind, and started walking around the court.

In the preliminary, Sholl's defeated Stonewall Democratic Club of Baltimore, 33-26. Sholl's led, 16-7, at the half.

League Considered By Eastern Shore

Meeting to Be Held Tonight to Discuss Plans.

By the Associated Press.

Easton, Md., Feb. 24.—Formation of an Eastern Shore Baseball League will be discussed tomorrow night at a supper-dance at Tilghman, near here.

The affair is being staged by the Tilghman Baseball Team, a member of an independent league which played several week-end games last season.

At tomorrow night's event a meeting to which baseball fans from many of the Eastern Shore towns would be invited to draft plans for a league will be considered. Any town on the peninsula could send delegates to the proposed meeting if it is called.

Among the towns which are being considered in the formation of the loop are: Queenstown, Centerville, Chestertown, Tilghman, Easton, Federalsburg, Cambridge, Preston and Mardela.

Lincoln Uses Pro Game, Howard, Beaten, Hints

Reports that Lincoln University basket ball tactics savor strongly of "professional playing" were current here yesterday as Howard University cagers returned from New York, where they lost the national colored collegiate championship to the fast-passing clergymen of Lincoln, 35 to 25, Saturday.

It (meaning the professional play) "was too much for Howard to overcome," Howard fans said. "Howard is accustomed to playing the collegiate type of basket ball." Desverney was the high scorer for Lincoln with 12 points, while Williams led the Washington team with 9.

Wigglesworth-to-Fish Passes Harvard's Victory Sign in '10

By Dillon Graham.
Associated Press Staff Writer.

ALABAMA'S Howell-to-Hutson passing act is just about tops in modern football but Congress can produce one that was a whiz when father was a boy—Harvard's Wigglesworth-to-Fish.

Representative Richard Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts, was the quarter back who sailed forward passes in 1910 to an All-Alabama tackle, Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York.

That was in the days when tackles often were eligible for passes. "No passer ever had a better target than Fish," says the quiet, slender Wigglesworth. "All I had to do was shoot the ball somewhere near him. He was so tall he could jump and grab it."

Not only was Wigglesworth a smart signal-caller for the Crimson for three years but he remained in Cambridge as backfield coach for another six years. He's rather proud that during that time, Harvard never bowed to Yale's gridiron forces.

Wigglesworth still wears on his watch chain the gold footballs awarded when Brickley's team beat Yale, 36-0, and Mahan's won, 41-0.

"Mahan was the best back I ever coached or ever saw in action," Wigglesworth says. "He could do everything well."

While a Harvard mentor, Wigglesworth devised several forward pass formations that carried enough deception to gain consistently against all foes and to score decisive points in several major contests.

Wigglesworth also played centerfield in baseball and right forward on Harvard's hockey team. Golf is about his only sport now. His Congressional duties keep him so busy he rarely finds time even for the links.

11 School Fives End Seasons This Week

Eastern-G. U. Frosh Game Looms as Feature of Court Program.

ONLY a feeble breath of life will remain in the 1934-35 high and prep school basket ball season by the close of this week. All but three of those teams which have not already done so finish their schedules.

Georgetown Prep, Alexandria and Hyattsville face another week of action, but Tech, Central, Western, Takoma-Silver Spring, St. John's, Gonzaga, St. Alban's, Friends, Rockville, Episcopal and Mount Rainier complete the grind this week.

While not yet definitely arranged, the Eastern-Georgetown Freshman game, which probably will be played Friday night at Tech High, stands as the big attraction.

Another big battle brings Gonzaga and St. John's together Friday afternoon at St. John's with the Private High School League title hanging in the balance. A victory for Gonzaga would clinch the title for the Purple, but a St. John's triumph would make it a three-way tie among Georgetown Prep, St. John's and Gonzaga.

Gonzaga's Stock Drops.

St. John's victory over Georgetown Prep two weegs ago threw the series into more or les of an open affair. Gonzaga, an early season favorite to take the title, now appears no better than a slight choice.

Central closes its season with a two-day trip, Friday and Saturday. The Mount Pleasanters tackle Cambridge High, of Cambridge, Md., Friday and Saturday meet the Washington College Junior varsity five at Chestertown, Pa.

Some other fast games bring Alexandria against Gonzaga tomorrow afternoon at Gonzaga tomorrow afternoon at Gonzaga and against Western Friday at Alexandria. Landon and Friends renew their old rivalry at Friends tomorrow, while Gonzaga and Washington-Lee meet again at Gonzaga, Wednesday night.

The Rockville Sportmanship Tournament at Rockville High Friday night is the highlight of the week for Maryland teams. Bethesda-Chevy Chase and Rockville are the favorites in this round-robin test for suburban school supremacy.

Track Athletes To Clash at Charlotte

Torrence Among Entrants; Evans of Maryland in Games Tonight.

By the Associated Press.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Feb. 24.—Track and field athletes of eleven Southern schools will participate in the Charlotte indoor games tomorrow night at the Charlotte Armory with indications that several records may tumble.

Heading the list of participants will be Jack Torrance, mammoth shot putter from Louisiana State University, who failed last night in the annual A. A. U. championships at New York to approach the indoor record.

Principal interest will attach to the Barrett mile, feature on the 10-event program arranged under sponsorship of the Charlotte Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Harry Williamson, University of North Carolina's outstanding runner of the indoor season, will be one of the six starters in the mile feature.

Others who will run in that event are Dunaj, of Washington and Lee; ardwell, of South Carolina; Banta, of Virginia; Tabb, of Richmond University, and Heritage, of Duke.

Glenn (Slats) Hardin, quarter-mile star from L. S. U., will be one of the entries in the 880-event along with Gardiner, of North Carolina; Ranking, of Georgia; Evans, of Maryland; Bullard, of William and Mary; Peterson, of Richmond University, and Sease, of South Carolina.

Rockville Tourney To Open on Friday

Four Teams Entered in Sportsmanship Event.

The seventh annual sportsmanship basket ball tournament at Rockville is the feature attraction this week on the Montgomery County program, which includes five other contests, with at least five of the schools ending their schedules.

Bethesda, champion for the third straight year, concluded its schedule with a runner-up berth in the metropolitan tourney. Rockville's semifinal game is with Bowie tomorrow, while the Taksils visit Hyattsville. Sherwood and Gaithersburg clash in a fourth-place decisive game on Wednesday.

The tourney is carded on Friday, with Gaithersburg, Sherwood, Silver Spring and Rockville competing. Poolesville plays a return game at Leesburg with Luckets High on the same day, while Silver Spring's annual visit to Charlotte Hall concludes the week on Saturday.

"Johnny listened eagerly," explained Mrs. LaRowe. But when he got too excited, we turned it off. Mr. LaRowe's much improved since the boys won—if they hadn't, I believe it would have killed him. Now, I think he'll be up and about as chipper as you please after a little more rest."

"I'll see you at the conference next year," Johnny flung down the stairs as an afterthought as we were leaving. "Don't forget, the doctors gave me only six months to live when they discharged me from the Army in 1891. I'll be at the ringside for the next conference, too."

So, you people who have been counting the old warrior out had better find something else to worry about. What in the world can stop a guy like that?

Got Bad Breaks.

In the tournament, the breaks did not come for Coach Jack Harmony, pilot of the second-place Maryland aggregation. With Nedomatsky, McAboy, Lombardo and McCaw reaching the finals, the Old Liners were within inches—or punches—of dethroning the Cavaliers.

The first blow to Maryland—and it was a knockout blow—came following the afternoon fights when McAboy was rushed to the hospital, where a hurried X-ray disclosed a broken bone in his right hand. He was in no condition to fight, and there was no alternative but a forfeit to Al Mann, of Duke. Before the crack-up, McAboy seemed a certain winner of the 165-pound championship.

Many were conceding Walter Webb an even chance with Maynard Womer for the 145-pound championship, basing their predictions on a recent dual meet bout in which a badly worried Womer barely shaded Walter. The Womer of the conference, however, was not the Womer of the dual meet.

Broke Right Hand.

While Ivan Nedomatsky, the sensational Maryland lightweight conference champion, was able to get through the tournament without being forced to forfeit, he broke his right hand in the first round of his final fight against Jack Kneipp, of Duke. Ivan stopped Kneipp in the third round with a left hook, but will be lost to Maryland for its two more dual meets against Army and Catholic University.

Winding up in second place as it did, Maryland was just five points from tying the winners. Another victory over opposition from a school than Virginia would have given the Terps their tie. Lombardo was unable to make the grade against Capt. Sam Giddens, of North Carolina, and McAboy, of course, was forced to forfeit.

Had Maryland's Webb defeated Virginia's Womer in the 145-pound competition, the result would have been just reversed, with Maryland the new champion with 21 points and Virginia in runner-up position with 16 points.

Harmony Is Sick.

"I'm sick," commented Coach Harmony anent the situation this morning. "We were so close all the time, and I'm not alibiing, but didn't we get the darndest breaks? It was bad enough for McAboy to get cracked up, but with Nedomatsky now out for the season, I'm sick, just sick."

Duke, while tied with Maryland for second-place honors, never was in the strategic position to strike out for the championship as was Maryland. When their Ray Matulewicz fell by the wayside on the opening day, the Blue Devils lost a stranglehold on 165-pound division honors.

Faced Tough Rivals.

Duke's four finalists all were facing the very toughest opposition. Capt. Freddie Lloyd, who was awarded the decision over Virginia's Gordon Rainey for the 125-pound title, was a very lucky lad indeed, in the opinion of this writer. Our score sheet showed Gordon a clear winner on points—and he certainly did have the Blue Devil belter on the way out at the final bell.

Jack Kneipp, Duke lightweight who is good enough to win a championship in almost any league, had the misfortune of being in the same weight division as Nedomatsky, who bats like a big leaguer. Kneipp's defeat at the hands of Ivan the Terrible was a foregone conclusion to everyone but a few loyal rooters and Jack himself.

Al Mann, winner of the junior middleweight championship on a forfeit from McAboy, probably would have fallen an easy victim to the unorthodox ringmanship of the Maryland mitten manipulator had Lyman been able to enter the ring against him. Granger, the Blue Devil heavyweight, while he put up a nice fight against Virginia's Freddy Cramer, was not conceded much chance of upsetting the busy big boy—and he didn't.

Tarheels Out Early.

North Carolina was out of the running before the finals. Strangely enough, only two members of the strong Tarheel collection of clouters were able to reach the championship bracket.

Maynard Diehl was the victim of an Archie Hahn fighting his very best. Sam Giddins, the other Carolina finalist, triumphed fairly decisively over Maryland's "dark horse"—Mike Lombardo.

Clemson, South Carolina and Carolina State figured rather prominently in the opening rounds, but faded out. Washington and Lee, with only one entry, never was a contender, and V. M. I. and V. P. I. were not represented in the fisticuffing.

Interest in this year's conference tournament reached a new high, largely because of the possibility of any one of the four strongest teams winning. It is estimated that 20,000 witnessed the two-day fist flinging fiesta, which drew 2,500 Friday afternoon, 5,500 Friday night, the same number yesterday afternoon and the record-breaking crowd of 7,000 last night.

Celtic Quintet Wins Title in First Half

Defeats Senators, 12 to 9; Takes Early Lead and Is Never Headed.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Feb. 24.—The St. Mary Celtics today defeated the Senators for the Junior loop first half title, 12 to 9.

Each club had previously won five games and dropped one.

Taking the lead at the outset the Celtics were never headed. They led at the half, 5 to 2. Close guarding and erratic shooting kept the score down. Ches Clinkscale's defensive work in holding Williams scoreless was considered the best bit of back court work turned in by any player in the series thus far.

Managers of the Junior League teams will meet at 4:15 p. m. tomorrow to discuss plans for the second half.

Sir Malcolm To Seek Mark Shortly

Will Tune Up Racer Today and Await His First Opportunity.

By Edward J. Neil.
Associated Press Staff Writer.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Feb. 24.—Bluebird springs to life again tomorrow, after slumbering for a week in her garage, and there's more than a slight possibility that Sir Malcolm Campbell will take a final test run within the next few days before shooting at his own 272-mile-an-hour record.

The British speed prince has been here almost a month and, although the 11½-mile beach on which he made his record two years ago has deteriorated steadily since his arrival, Campbell is pining for action.

Bluebird, the streamlined 2,500-horsepower monster, will be tuned up in the garage tomorrow. Any day thereafter may see the little man and the giant machine in action on the beach.

To Try It First Chance.

"I'm going to go at the first opportunity," he said today. "The beach is in dreadful shape, but it can change overnight. The tractors and mule teams have done splendid work smoothing rough places and filling in gullies, but what we must have is a high tide and a storm from the northeast. Then we'll run for the record."

The slender 50-year-old Englishman is more determined than ever that he won't leave here without a new record.

He'll never be satisfied until he has pressed an automobile to 300 miles an hour. If he doesn't make it this time he'll be back again.

Kept Setting Records.

It took him six months to get the beach he wanted in Africa, and half that long for a proper surface on the sands of Pendine, Wales. Each time he stayed on, and each time he set a record.

The vicissitudes of nature this time on Daytona's normally tractable sands have been enough to try the stanchest racing nerves.

More than a week ago, when Sir Malcolm made his first test run and got as high as 200 at his own estimate, the sands were rough. Three or four days work was necessary to get the "bugs" out of Bluebird, never ridden before since rebuilding.

The speedometer broke at the start, the brakes were binding, the clutch seemed to slip a little as it worked in, and the motor stalled a couple of times. When these minor adjustments had been made, the beach had gone from bad to worse.

Schmarr Tops Washington Scorers

Rolls Up 181 Points for Year; May Surrender to Goldfadden.

HERMIE SCHMARR, Catholic University's strong-man forward, still leads the parade as the District courtmen stagger down the last few yards in their race for the individual scoring crown, but it may be only a matter of time until the broad-chested Dutchman surrenders his position to another.

Schmarr's total of 181 points is 11 more than that of Ben Goldfadden, G. W. forward, but Goldfadden gets one more crack at the honors this week against Geneva, whom the Colonials meet in their final game of the season.

But the lad who has the best chance of winning the crown is Ed Hargaden, of Georgetown, who is mired in fifth place at the moment, but who has four games in which to get enough points to tie for the lead or win the title outright. Hargaden's total this morning is 153.

First 10 Scorers.

The first 10 scorers in order are, Schmarr, 181; Goldfadden, 170; Tipton, 158; Kiesel, 156; Hargaden, 153; Howell, 148; Lieb, 142; Fox, 127; Willis, 123, and Waters, 111.

Catholic U., which concluded its season last week, is certain to finish with the best team record by virtue of its 12 wins in 16 games. Wilson Teachers, who have floundered around since losing their three best men, and George Washington have the next best records, while the other schools have witnessed their poorest campaigns in recent years.

Silver Spring High Faces Hyattsville

Final Contest in League Slated Tomorrow.

Silver Spring High visits Hyattsville tomorrow in the final clash of the Intersuburban League, with undisputed possession of third place hanging in the balance. The Springers will be out to avenge a one-point defeat suffered at Silver Spring.

Alexandria clinched the title last week with a victory over Hyattsville, ending the season with one defeat in six contests. Washington and Lee won four and lost two for runner-up.

"Nappy" Nugent, of Alexandria, outstanding player of the series, walked off with the individual scoring crown with 76 points, an average of nearly 13 per game. He was closely followed by his teammate, Burrell, and Cooper, of the Little Generals, with 71 and 70, respectively.

Berlinger, Penn's Great Athlete, Turns Down Juicy Princeton Offer; Views 1936 Olympics

By Dave Herman.

BARNEY BERLINGER, the tall, dark and handsome all-round star of the 1928 United States Olympic team, here yesterday with the Penn Athletic Club basket ball players, admitted he turned down a tempting offer to coach the field track team of Princeton University.

"The offer was made to me recently, but this is the first time I've said anything about it," said the 200-pound square-jawed, broad-shou

'Fair Family Settlement' of $25,000,000 Inheritance Aim of Action.

By the United Press.

Winston-Salem, N. C., Feb. 24.—A court hearing on a proposed "family settlement" of the Z. Smith Reynolds estate has been set definitely for March 11, has been announced here.

The object of the hearing is to arrange a "fair and equitable" division among his heirs of the approximately $25,000,000 inherited estate of the late Smith Reynolds.

R. J. Reynolds, jr., Nancy Reynolds Bagley and Mary Reynolds Babcock proposed the settlement in an effort to terminate involved litigation over their brother's estate.

A special one-week term of Forsyth County Superior Court was arranged for the hearing. Judge Clayton Moore will hear the case without a jury.

If he decides the proposed settlement is fair to all parties, he will send the decision to the State Supreme Court for a final ruling. If he finds the proposal unfair to some, the case will be carried into open court.

Libby Holman, Broadway blues singer and second wife of Smith Reynolds, would receive $750,000 under the proposed division. Her son, Christopher Smith Reynolds, would get approximately $6,000,000; Anne Cannon Reynolds 2d, half sister of Christopher, about $9,000,000, and the rest of the estate to go for a benevolent trust fund in memory of Smith Reynolds and for inheritance tax.

All parties concerned have agreed to the settlement except Mrs. Annie L. Cannon, grandmother and co-guardian of Anne Cannon Reynolds 2d.

Lawyers said it will take at least three days to read in court all the papers filed.

The Federal Diary

Trade-Mark Applied For.

By Morgan Baker.

LACK of proper understanding and appreciation of the work and problems of public service, and the indiscriminate vilification of public servants as a class, has tended to lower their morale, it is pointed out by Dr. L. D. Coffman, president of the University of Minnesota and chairman of the Commission of Inquiry on Public Service Personnel.

BAKER.

Further, Dr. Coffman declares in advocating a career system in the public service, the tendency is to dissuade capable persons from entering the Government and to discredit the authority of Government.

State apportionment of jobs is deplored by the Minnesota educator and authority on government. He condemns residence requirements for holding public office as "a benefit only to incompetent applicants and petty politicians."

"The public service," Dr. Coffman says, "can become an effective instrument for carrying out the decisions and desires of the people, but only if the contacts of the ordinary citizen with the Government which are always through the agency of some public servant, are skillful, intelligent, reasonable, honest, impartial, and in accordance with law, and open to and influenced by criticism.

"The very existence of liberty under the modern state is conditioned by the quality and character of the public personnel. The development of a career service system is thus essential for the maintenance of freedom."

E. H. Brown (P), search room, Patent Office, steers many an attorney to the proper class for searching his invention. His broad smile and genuine eagerness to help typifies the high-class servants working for Uncle Sam. Mr. Brown knows by heart the several hundred classes of inventions and the thousands of subclasses into which they are divided.

Will Honor Giegengack.

On January 16 the 5,200 employes at Government Printing Office were thrilled by the news that A. E. Giegengack had been confirmed by the Senate as Public Printer. Immediately a spontaneous movement was started by the employes in cooperation with leaders affiliated with the Graphic Arts Association for a testimonial dinner in his honor.

Plans are now nearing completion for the affair which will be held at the Wardman Park Hotel Saturday, under the general chairmanship of Dr. George C. Havenner, cost supervisor of G. P. O. Assisting Dr. Havenner in the arrangements are:

George Ortleb, first vice chairman; John A. McLean, second vice chairman; William J. Cassiday, treasurer, and J. Thomas Ford, secretary; Miss Josephine G. Adams, Bert E. Bair, Felix J. Belair, James D. Bligh, Dr. Daniel P. Bush, Miss Jo Coffin (P), Miss Nannie Daniels (P), John J. Deviny, Joseph Duffy, John Eagleston, Edwin A. Eckels, William A. Edelblut, Ernest E. Accumulative Sick Leave.

A conscientious man I knew,
Worked hard for Uncle Sam.
Beside him worked another one
Who didn't give a damn.

The first man took no sick leave
He worked through every day.
The second person never failed
To get it anyway.

For 20 years the first man toiled
And then was taken sick.
His 30 days of sick leave
Were used up mighty quick.

The bills continued piling in,
His pay had long since ceased.
These added worries broke him down
And he was soon deceased.

The second man in 20 years
Used up 600 days
It thus would seem that loafing
—Is the way that really pays.

The moral of my story,
And I think you'll agree,
Is accumulative sick leave
Protecting you and me.

Coast Defense Added to Work Of Blackshirts

Italian Militia, 450,000 Strong, Celebrates Its 12th Year.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Feb. 24.—The Blackshirt militia, now more than 450,000 strong, is spreading its activities ever further into the military life of Italy as it celebrates the twelfth anniversary of its foundation.

The militiamen's latest acquisition has been to receive from Mussolini the task of coastal defense—no mean job considering that Italy's total coastline stretches out for 6,197 miles.

The Blackshirts already offer a strong aid to the army through the constitution of many technical and specialized military units such as cyclist and motorcyclist legions, riflemen units, colonial units, anti-aircraft units and premilitary instruction units.

The development of the militia in 12 years has been striking, and is evidence of the constant attention Mussolini himself gives it. He regards the militia as the backbone of his regime.

Development Traced.

1923—Constitution of 136 Blackshirt legions. Constitution of the colonial legions.

1924—Foundation of 30 river legions in the north to protect those regions habitually threatened by floods of the River Po.

Formation of the port militia with the duty of guarding the ports, preventing smuggling and theft. Last year alone this unit made 3,035 arrests, searched 4,858 ships and imposed fines on 5,296 persons.

Foundation of the railroad militia. A Blackshirt of this unit rides on every train, passenger and freight. Blackshirts guard passenger and freight depots, and it is asserted thievery has dropped to an infinitesimal fraction of what it was. This militia saved the Government railroad administration last year $110,000 by recovering stolen goods.

First-Aid Sections Formed.

This year the militia was given charge of premilitary instruction. More than 4,000,000 youths have been trained by the Blackshirts.

1926—Formation of sections of the militia for first-aid in cases of public calamity.

The Highway Militia.

Mary Astor Stricken Ill.

Recovery Now Chief Objective Of Wall Street

Gold Ruling Removes Obstacle, but Many Problems Remain.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 24.—The gold decision lifted an oppressive weight of uncertainty from Wall street this week and turned attention once more to the immediate problems of economic recovery.

Ending of weeks of suspense over the decision was celebrated in share and staple markets by a short-lived bullish demonstration. Industrial shares and better grade bonds retained part of their gains, but consideration of the problems of the rails and utilities later brought renewed selling in those divisions, which depressed many electric power issues to new lows for the depression.

Many business and financial circles were hopeful that release from the spell cast by the monetary uncertainty surrounding the Supreme Court's word on the gold cases would prove a decided stimulus to industry and trade. Signs of a decisive pick-up have not yet appeared, however, although some wholesale markets, notably textiles, noted some release of pent up buying.

Steel production, as estimated by American Iron and Steel Institute, dipped to 49.1 per cent of capacity this week, compared with the peak of 52.8 per cent reached at the beginning of the month, but this was attributed largely to code regulations deferring second-quarter buying.

Dividend news of the week was encouraging. American Telephone paid another $2.25 quarterly, maintaining its $9 predepression annual rate, and 20 corporations ordered increased, resumed extra or initial payments, compared with only 12 the previous week.

Bank reserves continued to mount, and there was some talk of a big expansion of credit, now that the gold decision is out of the way. Very little new financing, however, emerged from the discussion stage.

Foreign gold currencies rose to substantial premiums when the gold decision was won, and it was apparent that it did not indicate any possibility of a return to the old dollar, but it was only a temporary upsurge. By the end of the week the continental gold monies were again at discounts.

Job Insurance Experts Split On Application

Proponents Sharply Divided on Three Methods of Contribution.

By the Associated Press.

The question is now before Congress, but even there a variety of methods is up for consideration, although the Administration's favor has been given to the Wagner-Lewis bill.

Sociologists have declared themselves for the principle almost en masse, while the joint business conference for economic recovery, held last December at White Sulphur Springs, urged a "thorough and sympathetic study" of it "with a view to developing the best and most feasible means of solving this problem."

Three Methods Urged.

The principle is possibly best expressed as a conception that from current business a certain amount of money should be set aside from the payroll by the employer, or employer and worker, or by the Government, employer and worker, to be used as a partial continuation of wages in periods of unemployment.

The parting of the ways, however, comes when the questions of the details of an ideal and at the same time practical plan are considered.

Many groups agree on certain details, while disagreeing on others. The White Sulphur Springs conference stated that "there is no actuarial basis for the accrual of unemployment reserves. At most, such reserves can only cushion the adverse effects of unemployment." With this most sociologists agree today, particularly in respect to long periods of mass unemployment, as opposed to the minor or seasonal fluctuations.

Urge Government Payment.

There are other groups, such as that headed by Mary Van Kleek, director of industrial studies of the Russell Sage Foundation, member of President Harding's conference on unemployment, and of President Hoover's committee on unemployment and business cycles, who dismiss contributory unemployment reserves as a principle and recommend payment by the Government of full wages in periods of unemployment.

The majority of students, however, seem to favor some sort of reserves, as provided in the Wagner-Lewis bill, but their chief disagreements come on the questions of State versus Federal Administration, and on what groups (Government, employers and employes) shall participate, and in what ratios. In the Wagner-Lewis bill State administration is provided under Federal requirements.
